The further consideration of the Brownsville affair was on Monday practically the Senate until Dec. 16 next. This decision was reached after an exchange of views on the part of Senator Foraker who asked for the appointment of a committee of inquiry, and Senator Lodge, who moved the funeral of Senator Cullom. Mr. Foraker's motion was adopted by a vote of 42 to 0. Mr. Foraker said he had had in mind the Senate's power to make a committee of inquiry, but had conditions in meeting the President appoint a court of inquiry. Senator Lodge said Col. Wilson, President of the Army was referred to, in the course of his remarks, and he said he had received the House Bill protecting the name, "In God We Trust," and he had asked that it be referred, and passed upon at the succeeding session of the same. All was accomplished in a few minutes, and the incident seemed to be over, when Senator Foraker said he was sorry to have to say that the Senate committee had failed to report the Brownsville investigation resolution.

The Senate then proceeded to consider the Vreeland currency bill, which was passed under the suspension of the rules.

The Vreeland currency bill, which was passed by the House Monday, was reported to the Senate Friday, and as soon as the Senate Monday morning Senator Aldrich promptly made a report from the finance committee substituting the Aldrich bill in an amended form, and it was passed in a few hours. The Senate bill differs from the House bill in many respects, but it is in no sense an approval of the House bill. The work of cleaning up legislation in the closing days of the Congress, which ends March 4, is proceeding at a rapid rate. With only a short time left in which to do business, the Senate appropriation bill met the counter reform bill, the Vreeland currency bill and

Hon. G. G. Covell.

From the Frankfort Express.

Among the various attorneys of last week's session of the circuit court, was our old friend, Hon. G. G. Covell of Traverse City. George's presence carried our mind back 21 years, to 1887, when he first struck Benzie county and located at Benzonia to begin the practice of law. Those were days when law suits were few and far between, but our young attorney was not of the kind that sits down, sticks his number 10's on his desk and waits for something to turn up. He is not built that way, and here is a good example for any boy to copy, who has to make his own way in the struggle for success.

The fact is at that time George was very much in the same fix as the boy who was after the wood chuck, he was "nobleged to catch it" or go hungry, so he accepted the first retainer to cut ten cords of wood for a neighbor; the next was for building forty rods of fence, and then in the true line of progress which has always marked George's career, he went a step higher turned artist, took the brush, and painted the Joyfield town hall, and did the job so well that it has never needed but one coat since.

The people soon came to admire this young man's hustle and began to appear in our circuit court. Here is was hard sledding for he had to meet such attorney's as E. S. Pratt and A. V. McAlvay, who is now on the bench of our supreme court, and other noted attorneys, but like Budd Means' bull dog in the "Hoosier Schoolmaster, when he once got hold of the room, 'nail yearn couldn't make him let go. Push, hustle, determination and purpose, are the four words that spell Hon. George G. Covell, qualities which the people were not slow to recognize and so they elected him prosecuting attorney. Before serving his full second term he resigned and moved to Traverse City. There the people soon noted Geo.'s qualities and sent him to the legislature, first as representative and then as state senator. Senator Burrows, who is considered one of the best judges of men in the U. S. senate, saw George's abilities and in consequence he was appointed by President Roosevelt district attorney for the western district of Michigan in competition with an array of the best legal talent of the upper peninsula and the west half of the lower. This office he filled so successfully that he was reappointed thumbs down.

It was while prosecuting attorney of our county that the famous Wright trial occurred. It was through Mr. Covell's energy and skill in hunting up the witnesses and procuring and sifting the evidence that Wright was convicted of the murder of Marshall and Thurber and sentenced to Jackson for life.

This trial lasted a month. Three hundred witnesses were sworn before a jury was obtained. About fifty witnesses were sworn.

This case is famous among the criminal trials of the state, as one of the hardest and most closely contested trials ever up, for Wright was popular and backed by wealthy and influential friends, and yet owing to Mr. Covell's care and management, no case of such importance ever went through court at such small expense to the people.

He never put his o. k. on any bill without carefully scrutinizing the same and no graft was tolerated. His administration was characterized for economy, energy and ability, and every interest, whether of rich or poor, got a square deal and a fair count.

Boyne Citizen: Two big cattle being led through the business streets of the city this week elicited favorable comment. They were both young steers and together weighed 3000 pounds. They were the property of C. H. Tooley, the Water street butcher, who had purchased them from George Brown of Wilson township. They were the largest pair of cattle ever raised in these parts so we are told. The heaviest one weighed 1400 pounds and the lighter one 1200.

Dear Sir: Three gallons sweet is $12 to $15 on market.

Mr. Hauford Platt of Bridgeport, Conn, ordered 15 gallons Devoe to paint his house, and returned 3 gallons. His painter said it would take 15; a land-and-oil painter.

Hubbell & Wise Co. sold it. They say everybody has the same experience there.

The reason is, of course: they are used to poor paint.

Yours truly

—We take the following from the Traverse City Herald. We noticed the decoration spoken of, but the Herald has done the descriptive so beautifully, especially "the oft," that we copy: "The stem of the lilinon as she left her today looked like a splendid hanging garden. The aft is decorated with geraniums and trailing vines, which have just been installed, and which will soon be intertwined in the lattice work and make the stern a pretty bower. The effect is very charming and adds much to the beauty of the surroundings. In the dining room and also the cabin two large pots of ferns have been set up, which adds very materially to the homelike atmosphere and friendly aspect of the boat."

Returned.

The party who was sent up to Jackson a short time ago for slandering some of the descendants of Robert the Bruce, and for murdering Scottish history, was fired back to us last Friday. The prison authorities claimed they had no many of that name they were afraid of confusion, and after a careful medical examination they concluded he was a more fit subject for Kalamazoo.

For the benefit of those who are not posted on Scottish history, I would like to mention here the fact that the McNeill who was arrested for horse stealing was tried before a jury of women and, being like all other Scotchmen, a handsome fellow, they brought in a verdict that the horse should be king, as he was stronger than McNeill and should not allow himself to be stolen. SCOTT.

It is a Play of Today.

Probably no play is meeting with greater favor from the public this season than "My Boy, Jack," and why should it be otherwise, Mr. Edwin Milton Royle, the Author, is a writer of unquestioned popularity and ability. His "Molly Moonshine," "Captain Impudence" "Cleo" and "The squawman," have given him an international reputation. "My Boy, Jack," has been produced by Mr. Mr. Comstock in Milwaukee, Nashville, Philadelphia, Columbus, Chicago and Pittsburg, where it has always pleased and charmed the theatre patrons. It is a play of today. It depicts the most trying moments in a young man's life who starts out to carve for himself a career. He quarrels with his father, he leaves home, he fights poverty, he falls in love with a charming girl and gives her up to his best friend, he outwits her enemies, and proves himself a man. He never loses his grit, spirits and enthusiasm, but keeps on his way, leaving a path of sunshine behind him until his father recognizes his worth and begs him to come home and be "My Boy, Jack," again.

This play is now under the management of Fred G. Conrad, and will be presented here at the Charlevoix Theatre Saturday night, June 13, 1908 by Eugene Moor and a company whose refinement and artistic work is the subject of much comment.

Petoskey News: Word of an incomplete nature has reached the city to the effect that Ralph Connable, a former citizen and benefactor of Petoskey, had passed away a little on his winter's trip south. They had been spending the winter in St. Petersburg, Fla., but the weather there has been so hot that they decided to come north. Considerable trouble was experienced in getting accommodations and their start north was delayed. Before they reached Ocean Grove, N. J., their destination, Mr. Connable collapsed on the train as an indirect result of the heat. He died at Ocean grove shortly after arrival, the remains being buried there. Mr. Connable was one of Petoskey's most prominent citizens and was interested in any progressive of the city. It is hoped that more particulars can be secured before long.

ANOTHER MILESTONE.

The Sentinel Steps Over the Line into its Fortieth Year.

With this issue the SENTINEL begins the fortieth year of its existence. The first issue, in March, 1869, was printed by W. A. Smith, and W. A. Smith, the present publisher, greets his friends and patrons.

The SENTINEL and Charlevoix county are twins, because both were born the same day, or at least the same day that we think "twins" applies to the dual event.

When the SENTINEL was born the homesteaders came to "Pine River" with oxen. Now automobiles drive the farmers' horses into the woods or by-ways.

When the SENTINEL was born only small sail boats could enter Round Lake. Now the stately Mandon docks but a few yards from the door at which these lines are written.

When the SENTINEL was born there were stumps in Main street. Now BituMac pavement, cement curb and cement sidewalks stretch from river to terrace.

When the SENTINEL was born the publisher was a boy of but little more than twenty-one years of age. Now his head is silvered.

We do not care to review the record of the SENTINEL through the course of these thirty-nine years. We will only say that there is no state upon its talment. It has had but one hobby, and that has been Charlevoix.

We believe the record of the SENTINEL and its work all these years entitles it to recognition as a pioneer that has come up through pioneer times and discouragements but the rising generation knows little of.

Memorial Day.

May 30th, the day devoted to the sacred duty of honoring the memory of the dead, was ushered in with very threatening weather, but cleared up sufficiently to make the observances a success.

Baxter Post, representing the G. A. R., and around which centered the chief interest of the day's exercise, was out with twelve veterans, a pathetic reminder that soon, too soon, will the roster of these heroes be dropped from the record of the living.

The Odd Fellows marched with the veteran—and Romel Lake Lodge—with more than thirty years to its credit in the history of that grand old Order. The children of the schools, too, added their quota of patriotism to the occasion.

The day passed with but one unfavorable feature, and that seems to have obtained every where,—base ball and booze.

COVELL'S PRINCIPLES.

From the Traverse City Record.

Since the withdrawal of Dennis E. Alward, of Clare from the race for the republican congressional nomination in the eleventh district, the situation has settled to a contest between United States District Attorney Geo. G. Covell, of Traverse City, and Francis P. Dodds, of Mount Pleasant. Just at this time, from a respect sense extremely bright for Mr. Covell, and the sentiment, which is becoming more pronounced throughout the district, shows with unmistakable force, that Mr. Covell has been growing in strength since he was in the field for the nomination two years ago. Practically the whole northern part of the district will support Mr. Covell with enthusiasm, while he is gaining friends in the lower tier of counties steadily and surely.

To a reporter of the Evening Record, Mr. Covell expressed himself at singsong of the result and from reports from reliable sources his hopfulness seems to be well founded. Ask as to his opinion upon important public questions, Mr. Covell said:

"The awakening of the public conscience that has taken place during the past few years, has caused a keener sense of justice to prevail in, the minds of the rank and file of our citizens than ever before.

"The voters of our district have a right to know upon what platform a candidate comes to them for their support for the important office of congressman.

"In a general way let me say that my platform will be that adopted at Chicago next month.

"Protection has been one of the cornerstones of our party, always, but I believe the time has come when there should be a just and equitable readjustment of the tariff schedules, which will afford ample protection to our industries, the highest possible wages for our labor, but I believe the time has come when there should be a just and equitable readjustment of the schedules, which will afford ample protection to our industries, the highest possible wages for our labor, and a fair return for the products of the farm.

"The prosperity of our district largely depends upon the protective idea, and naturally my desire and ambition would be to serve the district in such a way as to safeguard all interests."

As to the financial question Mr. Covell said:

"I am of the same opinion on this subject that I was in 1896 and since, viz: that the standard of circulation should be based upon gold.

"Under our form of government, all classes, rich or poor, high or low, employed or unemployed, should have an equal show, and class legislation should be absolutely avoided.

"I am earnestly in sympathy with the progressive policy of our president, Theodore Roosevelt.

"To the accomplishment of these ends, I would lend all my ability and energy. Further than this I would not presume to go, else I would be making at platform for my party, and this duty has been assigned to the delegate of our great national convention in Chicago next month.

"My watchword will be, to do right as I am given wisdom to see the right."

An interview similar to the above, appeared in the Grand Rapids Herald this morning.

Northport Leader: George Agosa one of the best known Indians in this community died last Friday afternoon at his home in Omena. Agosa, Township after an illness of a year. Mr. Agosa was a good neighbor and a man of sterling worth and was highly respected by everybody that knew him. He was born at Old Mission in 1842 and after living there some time finally moved to New Mission. He was the youngest of six brothers and at the time of his death was 66 years old. Mr. Agosa was a member of the Presbyterian church at Omena where the funeral services were held last Sunday by the Rev A. Bistall of the Northport Congregational church and was attended by a large number of his friends and neighbors.

HUSBAND CONFESSES MURDER.

Throngs of Angry Newark Citizens Threaten Violence to Strangler.

Joan Torriente, a young Italian of Newark, admitted at the late hours of Saturday night, and in the presence of police officers, that he had killed his wife. The police reserves in outlying districts were called out to prevent any mob violence. Torriente was arrested before an enraged throng of men and women who had been attracted to death by the screams of the victim, who was stabbed to death in her home. He admitted to the police that he had strangled his wife after stabbing her twice in the throat with a knife. The throat wounds were not fatal, he said, but she had begun screaming and had threatened to call in her husband, who was employed in a factory. He said he had strangled her in the throat so she could not be heard in her last struggle for breath. Mrs. Torriente was 26 years of age and childless.

EXILE FOR MANY UNDESIRABLES

Dangerous Foreigners in Colorado Jails Will Be Deported.

Wholesale deportation of undesirables, including all sorts of suspicious foreigners, many of whom are wanted for past misdeeds, is the plan which results from the investigations being made by the immigration bureau and the state, county and city officials throughout the state. Governor Shafroth, who is in the east, is expected to return to Colorado shortly and will take up the matter of cleaning the jails from guilty foreigners and undesirables and plans are now being made for a wholesale deportation. It will be cleared up, it is said, as soon as the department of justice gets into the matter. In the lower jails there are nearly fifty foreigners who have been arrested, held and are said to be undesirable aliens. In the state there are probably a hundred or more.

THE WASHINGTON VIEW

Congress Will Adjourn About the Middle of May.

LITTLE NEW LEGISLATION.

Interest Centers in the Conventions and Presidential Campaign—Republicans Confident With Any Candidate, and Party Will Be United.

The conclusion is very prevalent at the national capital that congress will adjourn even after the middle of May. The appropriation bills will all have been passed by that time, and it is quite likely that a currency bill will also have become a law and perhaps one or two bills affecting labor and employees. Of course there will be no tariff legislation and probably little in addition to that already indicated, as the Republicans believe that a session just preceding a presidential campaign should not bring before the country any greater controversy than possible.

In spite of the attempt at economy the appropriations must necessarily amount to a large figure, perhaps in excess of that of any other session. The pension bill is larger than ever before, and this is also true of the post office appropriation. Just what the total bill will carry it is as yet hard to say, but there will probably be only two battleships provided for. Leaders in both the senate and house are in practical harmony, and in spite of the desire of the president to have more additional legislation there is really no more conflict, and he will of course acquiesce in the decision of the leaders of the party.

Of course the presidency overshadows all legislation itself, and now that eastern democrats propose to make a most strenuous attempt to defeat Mr. Bryan and become of the probability that there will be a third candidate by the Independence league the situation becomes more and more interesting every day. It is as yet too early to predict the outcome of the Republican convention, which will be held first. There is an undercurrent of opinion that the demand for Mr. Roosevelt's policies will perhaps after all result in his nomination, particularly if Mr. Taft fails in securing the prize on the first ballot.

But one thing can be said with the utmost confidence, that no matter who is the Republican nominee he will have the united support of the entire party; there will be no bolting, and there will be no doubt whatever of the result in November.

It is conceded by leading Democrats that Mr. Bryan cannot possibly win no matter who may be the Republican candidate, and the only element of doubt that exists at the present time is the strength of the third party, which might draw largely from both the Republican and Democratic camps.

There is one contingency which is being spoken of, although it is not seriously discussed yet, and that is that the election may be thrown into the house of representatives in case the third party should carry two or three states with sufficient votes to the electoral college to prevent the Republican candidate having a majority over all, or course if this should be the case the house of representatives would elect the next president, but who he would be it is hard to predict.

The Democrats, almost in desperation over the outcome of their party, have made many more speeches in congressional purposes than the Republicans, taking largely as their text the so called Republican panic. This, however, is not surprising the Republicans because they feel that long before the active campaign is on there will be an resumption of employment and a return to prosperous times. Even if there should not be the case they do not believe that the country would be willing to intrust future financial and tariff legislation to the party which brought said disaster upon the industry and commerce of the country from 1893 to 1897.

Wherever the Republican candidate may be, the battle cry of the campaign will be largely for a continuation of the so called Roosevelt policies and for a further enactment of so called trust but without in any way injuring stockholders in great corporations and without injuries in any way to the laboring element throughout the country.

The Republican platform will praise the president and his acts in unqualified language as well as the record made by the party during the past eleven years and particularly the work of the Fifty-ninth congress.

Because of the present deficient revenue it is not likely that there will be any material change in the import duties should a tariff law be enacted by the next congress. The surplus in the treasury is, however, sufficient for immediate needs, while our foreign trade is unparalleled in the favorable balance which is piling up month after month. During February the record in the number of exports was again live less, and the balance for the first eight months of the fiscal year amounted to over $520,000,000, greater than for any previous entire year.

Democrats Divided.

The eastern Democrats are almost in despair over the outlook of their party. They know that Bryan cannot be elected, and they are beginning to fear that he cannot be defeated for the nomination, and, although the southern Democrats pretend that Bryan is their first choice, yet they, too, wish that at the last moment he might be defeated at Denver. There is no unanimity in the party whatever and no possible chance for its success in November.

REVISION OF THE TARIFF.

Why the Task Should Not Be Intrusted to Democrats.

Hon. Hon. William P. Frye of Maine, president pro tem. of the senate, says:

A party should be judged by its performances. By that test the Republican party is entitled to a continuance in power. Not that all laws enacted by it have been perfect. No doubt any party in any country ever had such a record as that. Not that it has enacted all desired laws. No party ever did that. Not that all laws have been perfectly executed. No administration ever succeeded in doing that. Not that in its long period of ascendency there have been no times of depression and suffering. No mortal ever enjoyed such times. Not that the rich have not altogether prevented from oppressing the poor. Such a condition has not prevailed since the dawn of history and will not until the millennium shall come. But under the long reign of the Republican party our people have enjoyed such a degree of prosperity as has never been witnessed on the face of the earth. In no place and at no time has the average condition of the laboring people been so good as in the United States during the past few years. Of course this is not attributable altogether to legislation, but to a great extent it is, and all the important legislation in the interest of the people since the outbreak of the civil war has been placed on the statute books by the Republican party. If that party has ever been guilty of laxity in enacting such laws or its executive in enforcing them it certainly has not been during the present administration. In the past few years it has inaugurated a campaign for a "square deal" in the business world, which has exasperated whatever enemies it possesses of all other parties. Shall in the part of a great corporation have been legislated against and relentlessly exposed and punished. But such a movement cannot be consummated in one year or in a very few years. If it is to be wrought out to its utmost effectiveness, it should be by that party which is responsible for its inception and has made so creditable progress in its development. Never was the business interests of America in better shape. "Don't scrap horses while crossing a stream," was a proverb in the days of present situation.

The Democratic party is a party without a policy, a party out of construction, but of obstruction. The two important positions held by it in recent years, demanding the free coinage of silver and a tariff for revenue only, have been abandoned, and its orators have been compelled to admit the wisdom of Republican doctrine on these subjects. It had one opportunity to enact a tariff law, and the result was characterized by its own president as a monstrosity. The tariff is to be revised soon, and properly, as conditions have changed since its enactment. But all concede that it is to continue to be a protective tariff. It should be revised by its friends—by those who have shown their competency to deal with such matters. Then will the discussion be over, the business world freed to such a transition be minimized.

Comparison of Panics.

I repeat there is no analogy between this panic and the panic of 1893. That was caused by a long period of extravagance, this from a lack of confidence in men. Then the national treasury was empty; now it is full to overflowing. Then bonds were issued to pay current expenses. The late bond issue was to furnish the currency the people needed. Then the balance of trade was against us; we owed foreigners. Now the balance of trade is in our favor; foreigners owe us.

The most remarkable thing about the whole situation is the suddenness with which the crisis passed. That credit has the most convincing evidence of the really prosperous condition of the country. We are now in the aftermath, but things are improving. Men are gradually being restored to work. There are no unemployed that cannot readily be cared for. There are no hard times to speak of, no savings bank or trust company failures to speak of. There are no railroads in the hands of receivers.

In our judgment our return to normal conditions is not very far off. Whether there be necessity for currency legislation I do not pretend to know. I am in doubt. But one thing I do know, and that is that the people in the country will never trust currency legislation to a party which has in turn advocated repudiation of the national debt, that money and the making of a dollar of silver a dollar by law.—Congressman Dalzell.

A False Slogan.

Governor Lick of Missouri declares that "immediate tariff revision should be the dominant issue of the Democratic party, coupled with income and inheritance tax and popular election of senators."

If the Democrats do select tariff revision as the pre-eminent issue during the coming campaign they party is foreboded to the worst defeat it has ever had.

With that as the Democratic slogan the Republicans we only have a walk-over no matter who the old Dalr ticket.—New Bedford Times.

Pills the Bill.

The people generally do not desire to take issue on revision of the tariff at this time. That could only be the element of California by an overwhelming majority. The pres ent tariff suits this commonwealth at a most polite. Democrats who are far removed from most important industries are quite as strongly convinced of the beneficial effect of the tariff in this state as are the Republicans.—San Francisco Call.

His Place at the Broom.

The famous comp (print) by which Napoleon III. gained control of France is vividly described in the "Memoirs of Monsieur Claude." Among the many episodes of the eventful closing of Dec. 1, 1851, M. Claude gives the following: "Comte de Morny, the chief spirit of the nocturnal drama about to be performed, was at the Opera Comique in order to stay suspicion. A lady said to him, 'M. de Morny, is it true that they are going to sweep out the chamber?' 'Madame, I don't know anything about it' he replied. 'But if there is any sweeping to be done I shall try to be on the side of the broom handle.'"

Alfalfa For Dairy Cows.

A summary of feeding trials by the Wisconsin station with dairy cows shows that alfalfa can be made to take the place of at least one-half of the grain usually fed our dairy cows, and as the nutrients needed by dairy stock can be supplied more cheaply and easily with alfalfa than with grain the cost of producing our milk may be greatly reduced by its use.

A few good heavy draft horses will do more work on the farm than double the number of light ones. Practically every man requires a driver. The more that horse can be in a day the more evidenced will the work be. The light horse is all right on the road, but he is at a disadvantage when hitched to a sixteen inch plow.

A mixture of equal parts of linseed and ginger in the bag feed two or three times each day is recommended for the pigs that coughs. A lump of coal tar hung well down the trough that pigs will go to feed on its feet is also good.

Applications are best made in the morning, while the plants and insects are yet a little damp.

Then there was an eloquent silence.

Their Point of View.

"Don't you think," asked the sheep in the flock of another, "that it is absurd for humans to be cutting off our wool in the way they do?"

"I should say so," answered the other, "I call it sheer nonsense."

Some one found of generalizing has said that the conditions of the windows reveal the character of the housekeeper. A small quantity of water with alcohol in it is recommended as the best medium for window cleaning, with a newspaper rub afterward. A dry cloth for a window may be make with liquid whiting spread over it, and there are numerous other methods of cleaning, that make it possible to keep the windows so clean that even an inattentive housekeeper may get the credit of being a better one by virtue of her clean windows.

Keep Girls Young.

"It is hard to raise a back seat and see the peasant generation growing up the front ones," says a midsummer widow, who is not through being youthful, though she has two grown girls, one daughters. Also admires the "Bluebeard" which wealthy French widows exercise over the dressing of their young daughters, and the sacrifices of of this maternal misery could be seen by this country. "Truth she is true. Pity, if that event takes place when she is young, says the widow, "is from time to dresses almost as if the were a scientific child. Supposing she remains unwed at 21, she is still dressed after a uniform plan, so that her mother may continue to force youthfulness yet have outfits entirely different in style from her daughter's."—Exchange.

THE JOKER WORSTED

"What was the matter with you the other day? You were going down the street in a hansom. You were without a hat. Your face was dusty, and your nose was bleeding. Your collar was"—"Stop!" he said. "It was cleverness brought me to the condition in which you saw me. I've been getting cleverer and cleverer of late."

"Do get on with the story."

"I say that it was a dirty trick of Jennings to run away like that. And those silly books about Theodore Hook and other people of jokers ought to be suppressed. I wouldn't read that stuff about the man betting that he'd make the waiter swagger to the door to dinner and whistle it. I could have kept quiet, but after that I kept on betting clever ideas. Mind, my idea about the ticket inspector wasn't bad, though that wasn't clever—

"Tell me about the ticket inspector first."

"Silly, that was as duller street. I saw there was an inspector on the front, and, having a first class ticket, I got into a second class carriage, as I was to tell him that I hadn't got a second class ticket, but was quite willing to exchange into the third. Then he'd say that I could not do that and should have to pay the excess, the difference between second and third. Then I should have replied that I wouldn't pay and that I would change. Then when he tried to stop me from getting out I should have thrown him my first class ticket. See?"

"Yes."

"Can't you imagine what a silly ass that inspector would have looked? Well, he came to my carriage, and he said, 'Tickets, please.' I began, 'I haven't got a second class ticket, but—' Then he interrupted me. He said, 'Show your ticket, please,' speaking quite civilly, as he thought, to a fool like me with a child that couldn't understand. Then I had to show it, and he didn't seem surprised or amused or pleased. He said, 'Thank you,' and went on. Other people in the carriage smiled a good deal, and I rather fancy they thought I was a fool. Jennings's doings don't work out the way you have planned have beforehand. That was why I was wrong with the signaling in the grounds.

"What was that?"

"Jennings's fool brought me to the condition in which you saw me yesterday. I had seen the soldiers signaling in the park. They had sheet with flags and notebooks, and everyone round and get frightfully interested. Well, my idea was to do some bogus signaling that didn't mean anything and take in the crowd. I meant to write to the papers about it afterward, so that the crowd would know they had been fooled and get read with themselves. This is bad thing by the way, I ever do with Jennings. I told him about it, and he was a good deal amused and said he'd join in it. We got on blue serge suits and pitching caps, so that we looked official, with a dash of the navy about it. We had no flags because we thought it would be more fun to signal with our arms and legs, but we both carried thumbing big notebooks. We took up our positions in the park about fifty yards apart and took care to be near a path where people in crowds should be passing. Jennings signaled first. He stood on his left leg and worked an imaginary bicycle with his right. Then he stopped his hands together sharply two ends and finished by striking his chest with both hands alternately very quickly. I thought I should have died of laughing, but I controlled myself and proceeded to take down the message of all the signals in my notebook. I put down a little one for each signal. I didn't, windmill action with my right arm and leg pulling with my left. Then I crossed my left eye with one hand and stamped with my right foot. I threw in a few more eccentric movements, and of course Jennings pretended to record them. By this time each of us had a little crowd around him. At his end it was almost all ruffians and mannerly, but at mine there were a good many admiralty people. Jennings always has all the luck, as you'll see.

"I was at a regular bean feast and went beautifully. When the crowd had gone on I asked him if I was up to talk, as it interrupted the signaling, but after a few minutes a big, interfering kind of man came up. He was very courteous and partially intoxicated, but I fancy that he had a few shillings about signaling. He had not wanted us to stop at all—at least he said we were not signals at all and that the whole thing was a plant. I began to feel a little nervous. Then he snatched my notebook and of course saw that there were no genuine entries in it. I moved away, and that crowd, which seemed much numerous, moved after me. Jennings, seeing there was trouble on, joined at once in the most cowardly way instead of coming to help me, and as he had only marmalade at his end he was all right."

"But you were not?"

"The police got me out of the park in the end and put me into the hansom in which you saw me. I can't understand why people need lose the temper over a harmless little joke like that, but it did. Anyhow, I've done with these smart tricks now. In future you'll kindly remember that I'm just as big a fool as anybody else."

I promised not to forget it.—Black and White.

Air Purified by Curtains.

Dr. J. Brown, the medical officer of health of Hacup, has drawn attention to the usefulness of muslin curtains in filtering the air of rooms, says the London Globe.

The amount of solid air removed from the air by muslin curtains has surprised him. He says, they are cheap and easily washed, and should be changed frequently. One condition, he advises, but does not insist on it that they should not be dressed or ironed.

The SPORTING WORLD

Bowerman Says He Will Quit.

"This is my last year in baseball," says Frank Bowerman, catcher of the Boston National league team. "I'm going to give those Boston people the best I've got and at the same time show certain people in New York that I can still do. I've been in the big league now for thirteen years, and I think I'm just as good now as I ever was. Right along every year I've been letting close up to the .280 mark, and there is no indication that I will fall down this year. I've had enough of the game, however, and now I'm ready to get out and settle down into some business where I won't be in any danger of being turned out in the cold any old time. I'm going out in a blaze of glory, though, and this is going to be my best year."

Double Steal Scoring Rule.

When two players try a double steal and one of them is put out the other does not get credit for a stolen base. The above decision ruling has been made by President Pulliam of the National league, and another change by that organization have been instructed to take effect in all games. When guess dissed about the new ruling President Pulliam said: "I hardly think it fair to the catcher to credit one runner with a stolen base if he aids the other when the pair try for a double steal. It certainly cannot throw out both baserunners and should be prevented, to that extent. Of course there may be some who differ with me, but that is my opinion."

Gotch Believes in Saving.

Frank Gotch, the wrestling champion, says he has three homes, all larger than himself and all good citizens, but they are no match for him. He says he has made a regular business of the wrestling game, and has never let a dime do himself in for five six years. Prior to that time he did much as the average man does. He says he has never advised any one or asked any one to bet on him. He says manage his price and gets it. That must be in some of. He gets it, away and has accumulated a fortune. He has made more money in the wrestling game than any other wrestler living.

The inhabitants of Nantucket call the mainland America. They are a few and isolated from contacts, though nominally a part of Massachusetts.

The Bulgarians do not go into athletic sports enthusiastically, and, with the exception of "horo" the national dance, wrestling is about the only diversion they show themselves. It is said that at some of the best matches the Bulgarians will not remember the ring without a sound of applause.

Be Cheerful.

Be cheerful yourself and associate with those whose sunny temper will blend in a pleasing harmony with your own, and if brought in contact with the morose, the morbid, the too serious, do your best to dispel some of the gloom.

What Would You Do

If three good physicians should pronounce your case hopeless. If they should decide that you could not live longer than six weeks. And if you should get well, after suffering $12,000 worth of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Nervine, what would you advise a friend in like condition to do?

We have to thank you for saying we advise the "every age." We had continued with the cure until the third bottle, after the two previous doctors had failed to relieve. Now I am able to do my work, and have the blues from the blues. I cannot say enough in praise of your medicine. Yours truly, Mrs. Ella Jones, Ashland, Ohio. I thought yesterday I never should forget my suffering until I did so, and I hesitate to write for fear of being thought a fanatic. But I feel I owe it to the medicine. Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is doing the work. I am a very happy woman. Yours, etc., Mrs. Ella Jones, Ashland, Ohio.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money.

If You Suffer from Headache.

Many suffer needlessly from headache. It is not a mental condition and nothing due to some functional disorder or to defective eyes usually can be cured by overeating or to sleeping in badly ventilated rooms.

Be careful about your diet, take plenty of exercise, do not overtrain your system since all get plenty of fresh air and your headaches are apt to vanish.

Never sleep in a room that has not at least one window up high, winter and summer. It will cool do no draft. Hinge from the next room or the hall, what is needed is air fresh from outdoors.

A Modern Development.

"And why does she have contagious diseases with us? Is not that unusual?" asks the parent.

"Well—no, no doubt it is a new manifestation of our changing conditions. I might diagnose the case as cold storage chicken pox."—Success Magazine.

The Chauffeur and the Jewels

CHAPTER IV.

Three days after Mr. Warling and her jewels left Hurse, an artist boarded the Liverpool express at Rugby as it was leaving Birmingham, barely in time to be locked in by the grumbling, the rushing guard.

The two other people in compartment of the first class compartment—young sports with their hedging caddy bags, their golf cases, and their Gladstone—look up the entire seat. The artist settled himself comfortably in a corner opposite, and pulling his cap well over his face and long, curly brown hair, opened his Daily Telegraph.

Having read the sidetopics from end to end, he placed himself, over the political news, and finally, doubtless, was caught back in the sinuous paragraphs of current interest with attractive, and, in particular, with some amusement.

"Remarkable Burglary at Havre."

"American Woman Robbed by Her Chauffeur."

And then below:

"Mrs. Richard Warling, of New York and Washington, who has been travelling on the Continent with a party of friends, was the victim of a clever robbery, of some unusually fine diamonds, valued at 75,000 francs.

"The gems must have been stolen from her trunk while in the Hotel Normandie. The suspected thief is her chauffeur, one Lucien Barin, who left the employ of the Highness the Prince del Pino. Barin has been running Mrs. Warling's car for the past two months.

"The burglary was not discovered until the morning, when the party was leaving Caltais, but the authorities of the place were immediately informed of the affair and are on the lookout for the thief. A description of Barin is offered for the apprehension."

Having read this paragraph twice over very carefully, the artist folded the paper, crossed it neatly, smoothed and folded it back in its creases, giving himself up to a bit of hard thinking which lasted till the train rumbled into the Liverpool station just five minutes late.

It was while the artist was hurrying up a cab, that he first noticed the man in the brown overcoat—a tall, thin, stooping shouldered person, who favored him with a brief, inquisitive stare, then disappeared into the ticket office.

A brown overcoat—a four-wheeler containing a passenger and his paraphernalia bowl of and off in quick time in the direction of the Metropole Hotel. From time to time its passenger looked out through the little window at the hack with a keen, inquiring glance. Finally, pausing for a breathless moment, the fellow crossed a square at right angles and turned a sharp corner.

"Stop," said the man inside suddenly.

Dismounting, leg in hand, he looked carefully to right and left. Almost at once, he stepped into a narrow street given over apparently to lodging houses and a few, unpretentious, little shops and saverings. "Cabby," he said, speaking with a strange foreign accent, "I have gone first, and something, as you see, is wrong. Make a turn in the Mall, pack and leave there my belongings, be out at six sharp."

Then, crossing the street as the cab pulled off, he sauntered along like a gentleman's opening.

It was noticing at the counter a little later, indifferently choosing a note book, when the round of a shoulder brushed his side, and that and look out expectantly, but there was nothing unusual in slight—only a station man, a commonplace looking man in a brown overcoat, passing out at the other door.

Paying for his purchase and shouldering his big bag, the artist walked briskly up the street. Turning on his course, he soon took to side alleys and short cuts, walking with the assured gait of one who knows his ground, and finally, at the gray stone facade of the Hotel Adelphi came to a halt.

Entering the lobby, "Can you tell me," he asked the clerk, speaking with an Eastern accent, "if the Prince del Pino is not staying here?"

The young man consulted a slip of paper.

The lift was crowded, and he stood out the slightest pantomime.

Without a knock the door was opened in answer to his ring and a head thrust out.

But the artist stepped forward and seizing the cautious one by the hand, held it very firmly.

"Alcesta," he said in French, "do you not recognize my friend? It is Barin."

The other gave a start. "Come in, come in, without doubt," he said in a low voice. "I am alone. The door behind you."

It was an unusual situation in which Barin found himself, with doors opening out at the two ends, and six long windows commanding the busy commanding the street.

While the latter looked about him, his companion slipped to the precious opposite and drew the draperies more closely. Turning he came back rapidly, a thin-looking fellow of middle height, the typical French valet, with a sallow, smooth shaven face.

"And so it is Ludovic Sarto!" he said incredulously, repeating the phrase aloud. "I should never have known you!" as he surveyed the professional getup with a critical eye.

"I see, I had better ask no questions! Eh bien, the Prince is well, I trust? At least, only—struck by a sudden thought—he asked a few words in a whisper—"have you ever had the scarlet fever?"

The other shook his head. "A slight case, when I was a boy," he assumed briefly and then, with some concern "Not the prince?"

The other explained. "The devil, my father!" he exclaimed feelingly. "Such temper, such illness for the past week! Entries in each week's return, here not to go—what we are to do?"

The artist shrugged his shoulders, spread out his hands, rolled his eyes, and glanced upward, all in one brief, expressive moment.

"But how about you, mon cheu?"

The chauffeur pushed back his long ar-

it was the voice of a white-faced stripling of a dozen years, and he set astride an old gray horse, a condemned army animal that cost him $50, crying his nurse. He had a large bundle of papers, and they went off like frightened eggs at a bunker camp before daylight Bunker. He came back about dawn that night crying the Washington Evening Star; a yesterday's and tattered dog-eared copy, one that would not receive two minutes of attention in this day of sparkling daily gentlemen. He was around the next morning, bright and early.

"Look here, little fellow," said Captain Jim Brown, "where's you come from and where are you living?"

"I'm a Vermonter, sir, and I don't live much of anywhere."

"Have you kin, or your Western boys?"

"Ye'm—leastways they may be yours quicker than any other brigade. I've struck since I went into the boilerplate."

"Well, then, hadn't you better make your home in this brigade? I like the looks of you, sir, but I've got a couple of brothers who would object to having you hang from the Vermont boys, I guess."

"Your brothers are willing, we will take you in."

The next day the little newsboy, after dragging a wagon to Washington and increased it materially because of the new demand—appeared in Captain Brown's tent with his little bundle. "I think I will join this brigade, I think I will join this brigade, I think I like the looks of it, and I know they will please me."

"All right. I'm you need any help in filling out?"

"None at all, sir; I can take care of myself."

This occurred on Arlington Heights, opposite Washington, about a quarter of a mile back of the line occupied during one of those rainy spells so common in Virginia in October. It was the day after the battle of Ball's Bluff. That night, in the darkness, the rebels crept down and carried off the dead and wounded, and there was cover a little place there that he would not defend the brigade, and the brigade has allowed him a kindly side for him. He built up a large business, added New York and Cincinnati papers to his list. And if any troops in a active campaign had daily papers our brigade.

"Ah!" he ejaculated suddenly for the moment more interested in his own dilemma than in the Chauffeur's story. "Could anything be worse? Some scrapes has spread Around the report that San Antonio has the scarlet fever, and the hotel is empty, too, and—and—I'm a man! M. le Propriaire declares that if the prince does not carry out his intention and leave today, every one in the house will leave, he says will be ruined! Ah! Miserable canaille!" He wrinkled his forehead. "If one could but arrest their symptoms, keep things quiet for twenty-four hours longer, when everything will be decided!"

Sarto seized deep in thought. "The symptoms are virulent, eh?"

"But you, Alcesta, has paid for—the lead on the ship, Ah! Mille tonnerres! Sacre! And the very trunks on hand!"

"So much the better," said the chauffeur suddenly.

Alcesta stared at him.

"I mean it!" the other repeated. "Let them go, even if they have no room the cents to arise subpoenaed."

"You cannot mean it, my friend, he objected, with sudden forcefulness. "The prince himself—you do not know him—would upon no—no—no—under these circumstances—"

"Ah!" broke in the chauffeur. Look here, I'm sick of the prince of Spain and his affairs. We will discuss those for the future. Sit down, let us talk."

Placing himself leisurely in a chair, he eyed the valet with a fixed smile that bordered and boundered.

"Ah, Alcesta!" he said at the sight of this results many things. Just that promise has three two weeks in Tuscany? He gave some related resinlaceously on the ceiling. "And that accident to the gem of Ceylon? It was an unhappy affair of time," he laughed feebly.

But Alcesta did not laugh.

"I am pleasing, he expostulated, his eyes on the stand of his companion.

Sarto crossed his legs with a leisurely air. "Ah, I am pleasing!" he said, "and I was also that affair in Spain. Ma foi, I was pleasing! I was pleasing with my pigeons! Mon Dieu, I was pleasing! The prince has heard of the most remarkable pigeons in Russia, in a generation. Her mame is the key to thousands of roubles. I go to Russia, I take with me the most—great—and famous pigeon of all Italy. No person—nor or commission—has ever seen the pigeon of Italy by the police than she. For years a price of many thousand rubles was on the head of my pigeon. I go, I take it, I sell the pigeon. He used lasting and most lucrative sale. It has ever been and I know they will please me."

"All right. I'm you need any help in filling out?"

"None at all, sir; I can take care of myself."

This occurred on Arlington Heights, opposite Washington, about a quarter of a mile back of the line occupied during one of those rainy spells so common in Virginia in October. HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

In Heavenly Love.

In heavenly love abiding,
No change my heart shall fear;
And safe is such confiding,
For nothing changes here.
The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid,
But God is round about me,
And can I be dismayed?

Wherever he may guide me,
No want shall turn me back;
My shepherd is beside me,
And nothing can I lack.
His wisdom ever watch,
His might is never dim,
He knows the way he taketh,
And I will walk with him.

Green pastures are before me,
Which yet I have not seen;
Bright skies will soon be over me,
Where darkest clouds have been.
My home I cannot conceive,
My path to life is free,
My Savior has my treasure,
And he will walk with me.

Here is the inoperative demand of the Gospel, and the remedy never first place. The things you set first in your endeavors to your affections are the things you will attain. No matter of what good things you may dream, it is the things that are at bottom of all desire that will be yours. It may surprise some of us to see the prize with which we have been so long fumed, and yet play always will be those on our hearts desiring.

But the ideal demands more than the standard of morality. It calls for a giving up of things that ought to be given up, for the sake of the Divine Providence that is over us all. It should be the ground of our confidence and the strength of our hope for ourselves and for our fellow men.

Are there things we seem to live as if "without God in the world," we may hope for them still, for the Divine Providence has not yet been fulfilled in them. If God bears with them, surely we should bear with them. Remember all, for all their willfulness and waywardness, and the sin, it may be, that we are not of the things the wanderer back. It may be through a sorrowful lesson, it may be through a more still, and so we can hopefully leave them with him who is doing the work of his own. He does not force His way into our hearts, but waits for an opening door, and we can do no better than to stand open for Him.

NO SHORT CUTS TO TRIUMPH.

By Rev. George Clarke Peck.

And King David said to Ornan, say, let I will buy it of thee for the full price—1 Chronicles 21:24.

Thus did our man destine to take advantage of the world's need and sell a "bargain." Smith refused, however, might be little better than Quixotic. One needs a good reason when he persists in asking things costly in himself. David evidently thought he had such reason.

He had come up to Ornan's threshing floor for the purpose of there erecting an altar at his own expense. The sense of his recent crime was so keen that he was willing to pay any possible price for expiation. Judge then his surprise to be offered the property without cost to himself. What a chance to remonstrate!

But David knew a thing that Smith seemed to forget. The sacrifice cost him never be cheapened. To shave the cost of the altar is to cheapen it. Life has no real short cuts to triumph, God appoints no bargain days on which the standard may be lowered without the expense of the Almighty. To attempt to cheapen the sacrifice is to delete in the property of another, to offer the sacrifice of a country heart and life, and to do this is a specious fraud.

What is the "spelling" of a child? What but the payment by parents of the price which they should pay? Ask the man who does not know the meaning of self-denial, said a mother overhead, my son's college bills. Ask the man who has no sick children, he will utter all the real pathos of life. Ask the man who has made a "hit" at his first public venture. But that first hit was his last. He has been the laughing stock of his fellows ever since. Easy successes ruined him. The object we set before our hearts, the sacrifice that ever happened. Only the rubbish was when his friends guaranteed him against a rainy day. He was ruined by the absence of bracing winds. Hardship, and hope is not sweet, but ease drugged him. Oh, the shoals we practise against ourselves by our accustomed ease!

The last place for a man to save money is in his pay. And this was the old overwent another season if need be; let him relieve the fought a hill of life; let him be the man and share the cost of these altars which love builds. GOD'S LOVE A GUIDANCE.

By John Ker.

In all the ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths—Proverbs 3:6.

When solved with a mortal malady, Hopeful cheer passed by the last days in writing his very interesting memoirs. Knowing that his way in this world was ended, he devoted his last days to the work of promoting health and happiness and right living and knowledge of the world's good physicians.

Products of actual excellence and reasonable claims truthfully presented and which have received the unanimous acceptance through the approval of the Well-informed of the World; not of individuals only, but of nations, as the result of years of advertising and obtaining the test the world affords.

One of the products of that class, of known component parts, an Ethical remedy, approved by physicians and commended by the Well-informed of the World as a valuable and wholesome family laxative is the well-known Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. To get its beneficial effects always buy the genuine, manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co., only, and for sale by all druggists.

THE DEMANDS OF AN IDEAL.

By Henry F. Cope.

"Self-chastisement then best and give to the man who has taken up the cross and follow Me."—Mark 10:21.

Ideals are unattainable only as long as they are also tracks in which we tread. The visions of things great and good are ever before us, but we have something beautiful to contest for, something to do, something to endure, to lead, to bear burdens and meet difficulties.

Let dreams of greatness or of good, mean that go no further than dreaming. Let the number, perhaps, of those who we had never seen them. He who sees the height and does not strive to climb it is half a coward, and he who sees it not at all lives toward his lowlier ideals, and his dreams are mere shadows. Life were empty without its dreams; it were emptier still if it were all dreams and dreaming.

Yet how easy it is to be satisfied, with mere dreaming, and to make it an substitute of endeavor, to paint pictures of life's course, but never to be with the one to put the first step on gain up of them. So many imagine that they are doing something when they have thought on others of seraphic joys. It takes a good deal more than looking at heaven to make the heavenly life.

Now every sincere man is seeking the question, How may I realize the ideal? Every sincere idealist is seeking for means of practical expression of that ideal which is realized before him. He is not afraid of paying the price. He knows that it will be cheap at the price he has bought. There is an easy down-hill way, and there is a hard uphill way, but ease drugged him. Oh, the shoals we practise against ourselves by our accustomed ease!

The last place for a man to save money is in his pay. And this was the old overwent another season if need be; let him relieve the fought a hill of life; let him be the man and share the cost of these altars which love builds. The greatest sacrifices are those which are those which touch our benefactions. Our loss is greater than that of the Divine refuse to help. A proposal to establish a national park in the Appalachian mountains, to be dedicated and formally opened annually by the President and Congress of the United States, has been proposed to committees of Congress, that the cost is amply justified by the better health and greater contentment of the men, and by the lower amount of work they are accomplishing. Lowpriced labor is necessary in the most expensive. An important change in the plans of the navy is the location of dams and locks at Minetinos which the engineers had previously placed at La Boca. Nearly all the stone used in the work received the true bed rock, but a number of blocks of stone taken from the original plan will be used. Tests will be made to ascertain the amount of stone in the ridge and the locks and dams at La Boca could be made of it. CHURCH MUST MAKE THE NATION BETTER

WOMEN ARE THE PILLARS.

With, and in holding ministers of the church in America, as well as presbyterian turkeys and foreign mission stations in attendance, the one hundred and twenty-first general assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States began its sessions in Connecticut Hall at Lawrence City the most important business of the first day was the election of a moderator to succeed Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of Princeton, N. J., of Philadelphia.

The feature of the morning session was the opening sermon by the retiring moderator. It was largely a plea for recognition of the church as fighting the many influences opposed to the Christian religion in this country. Above every other notion of modern times, Dr. Roberts said, the United States is growing more and more the movements which are fitting men out of the pulpits. Those who are much are making the world a neighborhood and which seek the welfare of each other. Indifference of men to religion.

Consecration the great Need.

Dr. Roberts concluded his sermon with "spirit":

In this land to-day the church has come to a crisis. Never before in the history of the world which had made in a space of time so great a change in the conditions of life. Never before in the history of the world which had made in a space of time so great a change in the conditions of life. Never before in the history of the world which had made in a space of time so great a change in the conditions of life

THEATRE TALK NO. 5.

ONE OF THE IMPORTANT FIRST CLASS PRODUCTIONS OF THE SEASON, "CAPT. JOLY, JACK," WILL BE SEEN HERE IN A FEW DAYS. The play was written by Edwin Milton Royle, author of "The Squaw Man," the most famous Broadway success of recent seasons, "Moliere's Moonshine," which Marie Cahill found one of her most popular productions, "Capt. Impudence" and other noted plays. The company will have for its head and star EUGENE MOORE, who will be remembered for his brilliant performance of "Monte Cristo" and his high position among leading men and the cleverest light comedians. MR. MOORE SHINES BRIGHTLY IN THE PART OF JACK, and nothing could be better suited to the taste of American theatregoers than the character of this independent, worthy young son of a typical American business man. THE OPPORTUNITIES IN THE PART TO SHOW THE ACTOR'S ART in delineating a vivacious personality with a keen play of wit and humor, through which is seen true strength and nobility of character, are seldom excelled in any play. MR. MOORE IS ONE OF THE FEW ACTORS IN THE COUNTRY WHOSE WIDE AND COMPLETE EXPERIENCE and high ideals equip them to convey the full excellence of such a role. The other parts in the play are all of unusual interest, including the musician Karje, Margeret the prima donna, her dissipated father, and the landlady of the poet and composer in their poverty. The whole play is full of the best kind of entertainment the stage offers, and presented thoroughly well. There are four acts which carry the story from the poor lodgings of the poet and musician through the handsome apartments of the prima donna and the mansion of her rich admirer to the green room of the opera house. You can't want see any thing better in town this season than this production. STAR, PLAY AND COMPANY IS ALL THAT COULD BE DESIRED. Don't wait until the last minute to buy your tickets and then growl if you don't get good seats. WE'RE EXPECTING YOU and will give you the greatest value you have ever had for your money. NO GREASING WITH THIS COMPANY. Usual prices will prevail.

Letter to Mr. H. W. Kane, Charlevoix, Mich.

Dear Sir: "Three quarters paint" is a good phrase for the best outside of Devoe.

Devoe is the standard; mark it 100. The next best—there are several not far apart—are three quarter paints; you may mark them 75 to Devoe's 100.

The bulk of the paints in market are 40 or 50 or 60; a few are better than 60; a few are worse than 40.

How do they act? They cover from one to three quarter as much as Devoe; and they last from one to three-quarters as long as Devoe.

What are they worth? The same rule don't hold; it costs more to put on some paints than they are worth; they are not worth anything; the "put-on" costs two or three times as much as the paint.

Last Sunday evening, at the Congregational church Rev. Mr. Harrowell, the Episcopal rector, preached the baccalaureate sermon to the senior class of commencement events, taking as his topic "The Secret of Wisdom." The address is spoken highly of by those present. The musical program was especially fine.

The graduating exercises of the Normal class were held in the Methodist church last Friday evening, and an intellectual treat of a high order was furnished in the program. The graduates are: Mayme Scroggie, Annie M. Metcalf, Leah M. Peisons, Bessie E. Cramer, Lela M. Cross, Julia Bancroft, Minnie A. Williams, Alma Francis, Grace Meggison, Grace Hamlin.

The graduating exercises of the eighth grade class of '08 occurred at the Charlevoix Theater last night, June 10th, and it was the star event of the series, the theater being full to its capacity. The program, which was a most excellent one, being given smoothly and with ability. Following is a list of the class of '08:

The Mason Street Curb Matter.

To the Editor:

The Charlevoix Courier of last week contains a criticism of the common council and its street committee, that is so plainly a matter of spite that I feel called upon to briefly reply.

That a mistake was made is evident. Mr. Nettleton acknowledges the original responsibility by paying fifty dollars toward the cost of correcting it.

Very much stress is laid upon the neglect of the chairman of the street committee in not discovering and stopping the incorrect work. I do not wish to shirk responsibility, but desire to say that my salary as an alderman is not sufficient to support my family, and I am compelled to work for a living. Perhaps this accounts for my absence from Mason street when the foot curb was built.

Answering the reference to the unnecessary cost to the tax payers, I can only say that every member of the street committee and the common council are real estate tax payers, and probably have a slight interest in keeping down expenses.

How extensive are the real estate holdings of the Courier editor, and what is his proportion of the cost resulting from this error? I would be very glad to reimburse him out of a tax free place.

A mistake was made, and it had to be corrected, but I very much doubt if the tax payers of Charlevoix will justify the Courier criticism, coming as it does from spite, pure and simple, and from one who has been a resident of Charlevoix but about six months, and is daily walking along streets and sidewalks that have not yet cost him a fraction of a penny.

F. M. GLASSFORD,
Chairman Street Committee.

Charlevoix County Agricultural Society.

The twenty fourth annual meeting of the officers and Board of Directors of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society was held at the Russell House, East Jordan, Thursday, June 5th. In spite of the very unfavorable weather that prevailed during the last exhibition the finances were found to be in good condition and the prospects good for a banner exhibit this fall.

Premiums were added to and increased in Div. B—Cattle.

Speed committee will make a special effort to improve races.

The executive committee with Pres. and Sec'y were instructed to negotiate for special attractions.

Fair date, Sept. 22, 23, 24. Premium list will be ready Aug.

FISHERMEN ANGUISED.

A Concerted Movement to Test the Unjust Law.

A large delegation of Leland and Northport fishermen was here Saturday in session with local fishermen and dealers to devise ways and means to test the commercial fishing law that prescribes the size of a gill net mesh, and then brands the fisherman as a criminal if he brings in a fish weighing under one pound and ten ounces, confiscating a percentage of his catch, and keeping him in a continual state of terror of the "majesty" of the law.

That the law is unjust and inconsistent even the game wardens concede, but they must execute the law as they find it. Now the fishermen propose to take the matter into the courts for a fair test of its constitutionality. To this end they have retained ex-congressman Mesick, of Petoskey.

Whether they will attach the test to case of arrest and seizure, or resort to injunction depends upon what attorney Mesick advises.

But the fishermen have blood in their eye, and will unite in an effort to find out whether or not Michigan law can be made to work in justice to its citizens.

The N. M. T. Co. Schedule.

The Northern Michigan Trans. Co. is out with a annual folder which, besides containing much valuable information for the traveling public, gives the running schedule for the season of 1908. The Illinois, which we had fondly hoped would be with us again, will run between Chicago and Frankfort.

The Manitou the first sailing of which, will be alone June 20th, will leave Chicago every Monday at 11:30 a. m., Wednesday 2:00 p. m., and Friday at 6:29 p. m., arriving at Charlevoix Tuesday at 6 a. m., Thursday at 8:00 a. m., and Saturday at 1:00 p. m. Going South she will leave Charlevoix Tuesday 5:30 a. m., Monday at 3:00 p. m. and Saturday at 1:00 p. m.

The Kansas will run under charter with the Barry line the same as last year. The steamer Sterling, carrying freight, will make one round trip per week between Chicago and Mackinac, Capt. Small left yesterday for Manistee to fit her out.

"Flower Mission Day."

The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be at the home of Mrs. D. D. Campbell Friday, June 12, at 3 o'clock.

A special program in observance of "Flower Mission Day" has been prepared by the superintendents as follows:

CHASE S. OSBORNE

Petoskey Record.

The new steamboat built by A. L. Hamill, at the Petoskey Boat Co's. ship yard has been purchased of the commodore by the state of Michigan, and will be used as a patrol boat by the state fish and game warden. Mr. Hamill built her to run on the Beautiful Inland Route between Topinabee and Cheboygan, but since the United States government has taken custody of this water route it is expected that the river channel will be straightened and deepened so that a larger boat will be more profitable for passenger service there.

The boat is now on the ways at the Petoskey Boat Co.'s yard, nearly ready for launching. She has been equipped with a new 100 h. p. boiler from the Muskegon Boiler Works, and a high pressure engine from the Detroit Marine Engine Works; also electric lights, search light, fine cabin, texas, and sleeping rooms for her entire crew of seven people, on her upper deck. She will be named the Chase S. Osborne, in honor of the first warden of Michigan. Her hull is 75 ft. long by 15 ft. beam. She is strongly built, stanch, and of good model, and is expected to prove herself an able and comfortable seaboat, although originally designed for the inland waters.

Capt. Sam Rose, of Charlevoix, is Master.

BISHOP GILLESPIE.

The Good Gray Prelate Retires From Active Work.

Surprise and satisfaction, although accompanied by sorrow, attended the reading of a communication at the thirty-fourth annual convention of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Western Michigan lately in session at St. Mark's parish house Grand Rapids when Bishop Gillespie, for so many years the head of the diocese, transferred his power to Bishop Coadjutor McCormick. The communication was brief and to the point and was read by Jacob Kleinhans, chancellor of the diocese. Bishop Gillespie being present at the time. There were no comments and soon afterwards the session adjourned. The bishop gives as his reason for this action his age and bodily infirmities, which make it impossible to attend to the duties of his office. He requests his coadjutor to become the ecclesiastical authority of the diocese until he shall revoke his request in writing.

This relieves a somewhat difficult situation which has obtained in the diocese and in St. Mark's parish for some time and opens a possibility for satisfactory adjustment of conditions.

Bishop Gillespie's communication to the convention announcing his transfer of powers to the coadjutor, is as follows:

On account of my advanced age and bodily infirmity, which disables me from discharging the duties as of the Bishop of said Diocese, and in accordance with Section V of Canon 12, I hereby request that you become the Ecclesiastical Authority of said Diocese, and continue to act in that capacity until this request shall be revoked by me in writing.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and seal of said Diocese, at the Episcopal Residence in said Diocese, this 29th day of May, one thousand nine hundred and eight.

GEORGE D. GILLESPIE,
Bishop of Western Michigan.

"CHAPTER V.

It was a full hour later that a tall young man in a spring overcoat crossed the shallow court of the Ultonia Adelphi hotel and entered the lobby, which seemed almost empty of people. Some were smoking sleepy, others sitting or standing in little groups, while upper a student now leaning on the balcony of the crowd was focused on the sight of two girls sitting in front of the desk.

The young man pushed past the throng of lounners with most unceremonious and made his way to the desk. "Miss Lorbury, I believe? I am asking that individual. Now a minute, please. Are you in the room occupied by the Prince de Pierre's attaché? I'm on the Morning Post and have come out to get the facts."

"Room officially denied," he said, in his usual manner. "Prince taken down by on his unwelcome sick bed in a short, quick room of the Adelphi, in charge of one of the most sumptuous assemblies of which the Majestic queen of Star Lodge could have, taking in the best of masters with much satisfaction.

"Certainly," said the young man, politely, the new steamer trunks looking on the clerk's desk. "I saw the Prince's name on the board in the hall, his boots appeared on every one of them." He was speaking to a shoddy dressed woman, undoubtedly an American, who, from her appearance, was rather fatigued.

"He'll have to be his trunks go with me," said the woman, with a low but musical voice, "and I'm sure I can have two hours time from now to dress in. Just leave what the clerk says and send the boy right with me. I'm going to lunch with my own eyes, Lena."

"Have some sense, Mrs. Vane," the girl stood, as a smart case in a frock coat hurried from the lift to the desk with the clerk's desk and took up the receipt.

"Miss Lorbury," the young man said, in a voice that curved through the entire lobby, "I'm sorry, but I can't tell you whether right here for His Excellency the Prince de Pierre."

"Then, turning his back to the room, he hastened to an open door of the lift, with a man who had just come in from taking one with a very white face and dressed in black.

"The princess ill?" the American informed her hastily, as he ran ahead of the reporter avoiding the lift, and, as he entered the valet hesitatingly.

"Would it be possible for me to obtain an interview with the Prince del Pino? I have come on behalf of the Morning Post.

The valet shook his head.

"The princess is very hurry," he explained sweetly; "the leaves in one all little moment for to take passage of the Mr. Justice Pete New York." He dropped his voice. "His Highness tries that you will make well and rather the so dear power, which has unfortunately been engained. Son Alonso has had a severe cold, you which he has for now recent and, if I am correct, is better."

"Exactly. And they went in the charge of a friend, discreet friend of His—remember, my name does not appear—who has left them safely at the Waldorf. Thus will get our cable assuring this before the dinner is well enough to inquire into the affair. How is well is directing by the only plan for establishing the hotel capacity."

"I never should have thought of it myself," confessed the valet, with a certain enthusiasm, "but the two girls are so much like each other, it was always you. Lodoiki, who denied the door to the Prince."

"And those who carried them out and, cordially, danced the other standard. In time faith by the chemists. "With the rain for after and the power within six hours of his home? Ugh! Bah!"

"Lady Lorbury," said the young man, turning on her bed, his hands in his pockets, followed the gabbing sound.

"Tell you, for dinner," answered the another behind the shutters. "With the rain for after and the power within six hours of his home? Ugh! Bah!"

For some minutes longer the bustle slow unanimity, but to one at least of the steamer's five hundred passengers its harsh dissent was absolutely inaudible, as, standing in the strip of light from his cabin door, Saits opened a Russia-leather photograph case he was holding and scrutinized the face inside with intense scrutiny. A long, narrow, clean-shaven face it was, with gleaming eyes embedded in startling sockets that not unmoving misalogy. And so the high bony nose and thin-lipped mouth had a certain harsh distinction—the hallmark of a strong personality.

With a smothered ejaculation, Saits took a step forward, staring half defiantly at the man who came to meet him out of the square saloon. A tall, slenderly built, silver-haired man, who moved with a grace, his clear-cut features very saintly modulated—as impressive in their repellent sense as a business frown. There was no trace of the brown-bearded in his attractive greatness, no sign of the unmatched, bearded, lopping-gled chauffeur and on the other hand, no resemblance to the man he was presenting.

Being his brain to work, the disconcerted Saits now tried experiments with a little manual, drawing his brows together, slightly accentuating the lines from nose to mouth, and, with a fine result was in the main the same—was the Prince de Pierre, forced lining of amazement, bright, bold and relaxing, the real Prince de Pino, for the slighted attention to his counterfeit self.

"If Brown Hereward has ever met Pino, he knows, my game is up," mused this last.

But it was a long "if."

The chauffeur's chance lay in the circumstance that the minutes small probability that on the vast checker-board of life, these two particular pieces should have been jostled together. The prince was of the world, the chauffeur, a recluse, and the probability of their encounter was far on the probability that they had never had eyes on each other.

OVERSTEPPING THE CIRCLE

Cure a Girl Should Exercise in Intercourse with Young Men.

"Hello! What are you, sis—a jinrickshaw?" Kent Willard asked, as he came up the steps and found Esther chatting with one of the university students.

Esther dropped her caller's hat as if it had burned her fingers.

"Below, Miss Willard!" He seemed prepared for her to be humbled by "Well, that's the cheek!" she cried, indignantly, "if you mean my lasting his diary, I just caught it out of his hand. He hadn't shaved round, and said there was nothing all about me."

"I didn't know you had his diary," Kent answered, drily. "Look at this," he added, pushing back his hat and showing a scalded back, cropped close to the forehead. "Jane Brennan cut that off when I was drying it in the sight room. One of the girls dared her. Oh, they're jolly, I'm sure! Well, that's the best I care about, but here would also rise to if I did the same thing to her?"

"What! Yield better set by it."

"I would serve her right. You girls dress up in a decent conservative when it comes to our taking liberties, but if you don't stay inside your circle, you don't expect an honorable retreat."

"A Kent, you're too funny."

"I am tired, too," Judge Holton smoked my Latin book out of my coat pocket and took out a note that Regret Hartford had written me in class, and then she wouldn't give it to me. She said I was her monkey duty to see what kind of notes I was getting in school, and all such stuff. I knew she'd feel slightly embarrassed if she did read it—was nothing for her to see—so I tried to get it away.

"This was all on the street, mind you, coming from school, and when she couldn't keep it from me any other way, she dropped it into the mess of her wallet—one of those instor-belial affairs. She'll have to mattress to get it out, and she'll feel cheap enough if she does it, too. I tell you, I was disgusted, and when I walked in here, I was sorry my own sister getting and smoothing another fellow's hat, I said to myself that you were all alike."

"But such a different thing! And Madge went too far, of course, but don't you know that a girl does those things just to flatter a boy—to make him feel more important to her?"

"Well, a girl makes one large mistake if she does," was the emphatic answer. "Its easy enough and waffle with boys, and pretend to think she's cute, but her stock goes down just the same, not much my words."—Youth's Companion.

All the horses belonging to the late British ambassador at Constantinople, Sir Nicholas O'Conor, have been sold at auction. The usual notice was put in the local newspapers, but the owner took exception as there were horses in the lot bearing the names of Pasha, Salim and Hareem, which he considered was offensive to Turks, and the list had to appear without the names.

STRENGTH THROUGH STRIFE.

By Henry P. Cope.

"Out of strife from strength to strength."—Psalm 7.

The difference between man and the dust lies in his heaven born passion for progress, the desire to push on, to grow, to improve, to enlarge his life, his knowledge, and his power. All life is growth and any form of decay is death. In the right life aspiration must as long as respiration. He is already dead who is satisfied. In whom there stifles no passion for better, simpler better things. That which potentially seemed to the soul a palace, which is today its house, would in morrow prove its prison.

Man was made to grow. All our past is behind us as that. Good in the rocks or in the written page it is the same record of toil, pain, battle, weariness and sorrow, climbing and brief joy—all but waves in the great tide that moves onward to the ocean of the depths we come, and no man knows whence he is at our lowly beginnings, rather do we explore in the stars make thus far. Neither things any renewed nor to prophet for we man, as the Master said, is that in us hates the carnal clung by sin, and we are ever in bondage from Egypt of dull content through deserts of clowing pleasure.

Man is made to be free. It is like a nature of the spirit of all life. There is the man who is satisfied, there is the burning passion for larger life, the sense growing discontent, with things which are, and the hope is to which he strives to his fellows and disappointed to become the man of the ideal, and the strength to dare and dare and still and to the same—was music, bright, bold and relaxing, the real Prince de Pino, for the slighted attention to his counterfeit self.

"If Brown Hereward has ever met Pino, he knows, my game is up," mused this last.

But it was a long "if."

The chauffeur's chance lay in the circumstance that the minutes small probability that on the vast checker-board of life, these two particular pieces should have been jostled together. The prince was of the world, the chauffeur, a recluse, and the probability of their encounter was far on the probability that they had never had eyes on each other.

GREAT "DRY" WAVE IS SWEEPING THE LAND

Report to Presbyterians Shows 45 Per Cent of People Free from Saloons.

BIG TOWNS SPURN LIQUOR.

Last of Eight Bishops Selected by the Methodist General Conference at Baltimore.

"Eight million six hundred thousand people abolished the saloon last year, including four entire States. Twenty-seven prohibition States have a population of over 10,000,000, while 27,000,000 more live in other prohibition territory, making about 45 per cent of the total population free from the United States from the influence of the saloon. Of the thirty-four territories in session last year, twenty-nine passed laws unfavorable to the liquor traffic, which is a legislative loss when it is seeing the present year that has not had one single temperance bill before it. In recent years no legislation favorable to the liquor traffic has been enacted." Such were the congratulations which the Methodist Conference of Bishops sent to the Methodist General Conference at Baltimore.

Bishop Thomas Bowman read the report of the temperance movement in the United States was reported to the general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in session at Kansas City.

It was shown that the victories of the year were not in the West, but were confined to rural districts, but every obstacle to temperance in the cities which had leaning behind Bim on empty roads, Atlanta, Ga.; Birmingham, Ala., and Worcester, Mass., each with a population of over 50,000; twenty-two cities, with an aggregate of more than 3,000 and 2000 have banished the saloon.

The Temperance Committee reported that while there was a time when more States than at present had prohibitory laws, more than twice as many people today live under prohibition as at any previous time in the history of the United States. The alcohol of the temperance work was given as twofold. First, to keep people away from strong drink, and second, to keep strong drink away from the people, continuing, the committee reported, "The battle must be accomplished by law, so far as men can be made to respect and obey the law. The foundation must be laid in the sober education, moral suasion and religious influence."

New M. E. Bishops.

The Episcopal election of the Methodist Conference of Bishops was completed at Baltimore on Tuesday, when the last of eight bishops was selected. The eight bishops are all men of the world by example and precept, and in the thickest of the battle for the world. It is said of Jesus Christ, "Thou art a witness for Christ, and to be made an effective witness in the world, must be a witness for God." Jesus Christ was the world-living Christ, and the world-living Christ was the selection of the eighth and last bishop, who, in his consecration and sighs of relief, The full list of selections follows:

Dr. W. F. Anderson, Dr. W. S. Lewis, Dr. J. L. Nelson, Dr. E. H. Hughes, Dr. W. A. Quayle, Dr. W. F. Mallalieu, Dr. C. W. Smith, Dr. F. M. Bristol.

The Rev. George A. Clarke's appeal against the ruling of Bishop Todd in Moore in the matter of Mr. Clarke's appointment to Hamilton, Dr. Dr. of Syracuse University was dismissed by the Judiciary Committee of the General Conference. Mr. Clarke preferred charges against Chancellor Day before the New York conference, alleging that Dr. Day had spoken disrespectfully of President Roosevelt in his writings.

HUNDREDS LOST IN TYPHOON.

New Disaster at Hankow Follows Recent Terrible Storm.

The steamer Shimsang Maru of the Japanese line, which arrived at Nagasaki, reports that she passed the wreck of another steamer through a typhoon off Hankow, following on the disastrous storm of last week, in which the loss of more than 1,000 lives with the wrecking of twenty-two steamers and a number of junks. The steamer in question was one of the steamers, including several of foreign river craft.

The steamers were thick with corpses of dwellers along the river. Hundreds were washed ashore in the vicinity of Shanghai. The typhoon came suddenly, and in a few hours produced hundreds of boats in the Yangtze River as steamers broke away from their moorings, and only those which could get up steam quickly escaped.

News was also brought of a great coal mining disaster in Kwang Si, where 1,000 lives were lost when the mine was fire.

Guiry Assails Homeopaths.

During the commencement exercises of the Cincinnati College of Medicine Dean Harvey said that Dr. Guiry, in response to an invitation to address the graduating class, had sent a letter saying, in effect, that the homeopaths were a band of quacks.

Mitchell Warns Operators.

Former President Mitchell of the United Mine Workers, using the report that the Steel Corporation intends to cut the wages of the miners, to make up for the increase in the tariff on tin plate, filed law and for the compliance with the safety sprinkler law, declares that the Pittsburg and Lake Erie is an "enemy of the people." The proposal to take over the Erie railroad, he says, would be a great eternal reduction in wages, as there would be a reduction in the salaries to be divided under the sliding scale.

Liability of Railroads.

The United States Supreme Court has sustained the decisions of the Arkansas courts awarding $1,222 damages to the widow of a brakeman killed on the Iron Mountain, while trying to couple cars not equipped with the standard coupler required by the law. The defense was that the road had taken reasonable care by providing certain aids, but Justice Moody said that such care was no excuse for the express provision of the law.

Jesus Appears to the Apostles.—John 20:19-31.

Golden Text.—Thomas answered and said unto Him, My Lord, and my God.—John 20:28.

If Jesus had only appeared once or twice after His resurrection, or only to one or two individuals, there would have been some cause for doubt as to His having risen. But to order that there might be no reasonable doubt His appearances were multiplied. He appeared a number of times, at very different occasions, and to quite a number of persons. See 1 Cor. 15:5-8. He appeared to filling up proof of His resurrection that Jesus appeared again and again. The disciples needed these repeated interviews with Jesus to convince them of His final separation from Him.

Notes.

When the Jews Were Sitt.—"The disciples had gathered where the door was taken entire. Now, on the second day after the crucifixion, they were gathered together, probably for prayer, and to talk over the events, and to consider what they should do next. Much tells us they were doing at such. Perhaps they were within them some fairly large the Jesus of Nazareth, who had raised the dead, His resurrection from the women and from some of the disciples, must of them be doubt, believed the good news, but not very confidently.

Peter Ran to the Tomb and Stood in the Midst.—Evidently He did not enter the room in which the body of Jesus had lain, but stood in the door, and looked in, and saw the grave clothes, and the napkin which had been wrapped about the head of Jesus. See 1 Cor. 15:4.

FREE TRADE FALLACY

Several Statements That Should Be Corrected.

SELLING CHEAPER ABROAD.

How It Profits the Worker—Facts and Statistics Concerning Certain Exports as Well as Domestic Production and Prices of Iron and Steel.

There lie before us on our table three conspicuously false statements aimed at our protective policy which we would gladly believe were inspired only by ignorance if we had not long ago learned that just such misrepresentations constitute the stock in trade of a very majority of our free trade writers and teachers.

Published No. 1.—The Orange Judd Farmer of Springfield, Mass. for Jan. 25, under the caption "What the Tariff Makes Possible," says editorially: "Every little while there come to our attention instances of tariff protected trusts selling goods cheaper abroad than at home. The United States Steel corporation has sold in Welsh the plate unless heavier lengths of sheet and tin plate have 20c or $12 cheaper than the price to manufacturers in the United States. While the trust is charging American tin plate makers $29 a ton it is delivering in Wales the same product at $27.90 a ton. The cost of transportation is about $4.10 so that the actual price received at Pittsburg is $17.80 against the $29 paid by Americans."

If the writer of the above statement had taken the trouble to inquire in the proper quarter he would have learned that the Bulldozer he had fraised against the so-called trust embalmed a grave error. The sale of about 100,000 tons of sheet bars some time ago to British sheet makers was made by the United States Steel corporation at prices netting it at the mill after the payment of freight about $22 per ton and a further quantity was afterward sold at somewhat higher prices. The difference between $17.80, the net price received by the makers according to the Orange Judd Farmer, and the $22 actually received is exactly $4.20, which is, we presume, a matter of no consequence to the Orange Judd Farmer.

What prices of our manufactured products sold abroad are sometimes lower than are charged to our own people is not denied, and the reasons for this difference have been frankly and fully given. One of these reasons is the desire to keep the mills running and the men employed in periods of depression like the present, so that the men can earn wages for the support of their families.

Published No. 2.—The Public Ledger of Philadelphia is a newspaper of such high character that its readers would not expect to find in its editorial columns such a bald and flagrant misrepresentation of facts as appears in its leading editorial of Jan. 16 under the caption "New England and the Tariff." In the course of a general demunciation of the Dingley tariff the editorial says: "Every one knows that the tariff on steel refers for no other purpose than to permit the trust to pay dividends on its watered stock." The "trust" referred to is, of course, the United States Steel corporation. This "trust" was not in existence until several years after "the tariff on steel" was made a part of the Dingley tariff of 1897. The corporation had, therefore, no more to do with the fixing of the duties on steel in that tariff than the writer of the Ledger's editorial. But, waiving the Ledger's chronological blunder, it is still more to the point to blame it for saying that "the tariff on steel exists for no other purpose than to permit the trust to pay dividends," etc., as if it were the only manufacturer of iron and steel in this country. Students of our economic history, one of which the writer in the Ledger pretends to be, know from authoritative information which has been published from year to year that the United States Steel corporation has many strong competitors, like the Bethlehem Steel company, the Pennsylvania Steel company, the Cambria Steel company, two large companies at Coatesville and others in Harrisburg, Reading, Lebanon, Pittsburg and elsewhere in Pennsylvania, and one of which is in any manner under the control of the United States Steel corporation, while there are many other manufacturers of iron and steel in other states. The corporation does not in some lines of iron and steel make 50 per cent of the country's total production; in other lines it exceeds 50 per cent; in no line has it the semblance of a monopoly.

Published No. 3.—The compiler of "Industrial Notes" in the London Times for Jan. 15 has been led through ignorance of his subject into the commission of a most ridiculous error in the following paragraph, which paragraph he thought of so much importance that he placed it at the top of a column: "Pig Iron Supply in the United States. The Frankfort Gazette is informed that German steel works (probably the Stahlwerksverband) have concluded a contract under which the United States American steel trust will deliver to them 100,000 tons of pig iron at $17.80 f. o. b. Pittsburg, while the prices of the trust for inland consumption remain at $29 per ton. If 'the United States American steel trust' could receive today a price of $17.80 for the pig iron it makes, not only from foreigners, but from home consumers, it would be doing a profitable business, but $29 is but a dream, or shall we call it and the whole story another proof of free trade sanity?—Bulletin of the Iron and Steel Association.

Headache and Cold Feet.

Often it is found that a chronic sufferer from headache also complains of cold feet. This shows bad circulation and it should be strengthened. A simple and helpful remedy is to bathe the feet in cold water night and morning and rub briskly with a dash brush or Turkish towel.

PROTECTS HONEST THRIFT.

Why the Republican Party Should Again Be Successful in 1908.

By Hon. O. M. POSTEL, president Republican club of N. Y. county.

The Republican party deserves success in the coming campaign because now, as ever, it stands for progress. It stands always for lofty aims for tearing down. It stands for the extirpation of evils, which evils must be remedied or the country will stand for socialism, along with the Democracy. The diseases to be remedied need purging; the cancer must be removed. The Republican party, having discovered the disease and diagnosed it properly, should use the remedies so the government will not fall. The Democracy should fail because it never uses a remedy when it gets into power; only decries the disease while out of power. The Republican party, believing in a generous tariff, can remedy any defect better than the various party, which does not believe in a protective tariff. The Republican party stands for remedying evils, not for owning them. The Republican party stands for reasonable redemption and not for socialism. The Republican party will protect honest thrift and industry. The Democratic party has always done its best to destroy them. The Republican party saved the Union in 1860 from secession. It will save it now from disunion, lead by a few who have gained wealth by nefarious rather than by industry. It has always raised monuments to its worthies, never to its enemy shrewd.

The nation needs legislation to protect both the poor and rich and to enhance prosperity. The Republican party has always helped immediate legislation. The Democratic party has always sought to oppose it.

MEANS PROSPERITY.

Why the Republican Party Should Again Be Successful in 1908.

By Hon. J. HAMPTON MOORE, member of congress from Philadelphia.

Say what you may about panics or industrial depression, the fact remains that under Republican administration the country has prospered as it never prospered before. No arguments that may be advanced by our "want a change" friends can ever alter that truth. Under Republican administration we go forward. Under Democratic administration we go backward. Under we advance, as we have done with prosperous results, we shall, as opponents are usually enabled to find some flaws to pick at. When they can it cannot, as, for instance, during the two Cleveland administrations, the slings is depressing. I am one of those who believe it is better to go on in the Republican way and do things that improve the general welfare, even though it be necessary to regulate, than to upset everything that has been done without reason.

America a Dumping Ground.

Under the phrase "Land of America as a Slaughter House" the Washington Post, finally says: "Almost inevitably the United States has permitted itself to become the dumping ground of the most precious set of nostrums that ever gathered under one flag—and this the flag of liberty! Possibly the sense of numerous nostrums." How long is the United States to be the asylum of alien quackery? How much more evidence is needed in the way of shell and bunco goods before congress decides that it is wise to make the ingress of assuming a little more? The Americans of the Pacific coast are confronted with the yellow peril in concrete form and are fully aware of the injury that will flow from the injection of yellow blood into society. An incident like the murder of Mr. Stevens shows only too vividly the necessity of keeping the white and yellow people apart. This is a subject that congress can take up immediately with the assurance of meeting universal approval.

The Share of Labor.

The United States Steel corporation paid last year an average of $705 for each of its 210,000 employees. Labor thus received $148,050,000, which sum exactly equaled the entire net earnings of this gigantic company.

The workman's share was a great deal more than twice the portion which all the owners of the stocks and bonds received.

It is a common thing to regard a rise or fall in the steel trade as a matter which merely puts quotations up or down and consequently affects no one but the owners of the securities.

A glance at the foregoing figures should convince any one that since labor gets so large a portion of the profits its welfare is even more vitally concerned than is that of capital.—Philadelphia Press.

The Negro Vote Safe.

Although the negroes hold the balance of power in several northern states and it rumored against any Republican candidate might lessen his chances of victory, yet there is no slight probability of their leaving the party and voting the Democratic ticket. When November comes it will be found that, as always before, they will vote for the Republican candidate, whoever he may be.

Boss Williams.

John Sharp Williams knows, of course, that he isn't going to be allowed to boss congress. Some decided changes must occur before anything resembling such a thing can happen.

Philanthropy.

"No," said the bishop, a wise and broad man who had seen much and suffered much, "I make it a rule to confine my charity exclusively to those who do good to others."—Puck.

HAS PLAYED OVER ONE THOUSAND PARTS

Eugene Moore

Fred G. Conran, producer and director of numerous popular attractions has taken a step in advance this season with an admirable production of a play by the distinguished author of "The Squawman," Edwin Milton Royle. The new production is a comedy drama entitled "My Boy Jack" and the star part of Jack will be played by Eugene Moore, who will be pleasantly remembered in "Monte Cristo" and other high class productions.

Mr. Moore was born in Annapolis Valley, Nova Scotia, "the land of Evangeline," but spent most of his early life in Boston, where he prepared to enter the divinity school at Harvard, but instead broke out out a career in the pulpit for him. But he early developed a liking for the stage, and gave up his theology for the study of Shakespeare and the legitimate drama. The late Thomas W. Keene gave him his first training in the hard school of experience, and he afterwards served with Edwin Booth, John McCullough, Frederick Warde, Louis James and Stuart Robson in Shakespearean plays. After this excellent training on the legitimate stage he was starred for a period of five years playing Ernestus Thomas' "The Burglar." He then joined the Frohman "Diplomacy" company and played the part of Julian Beaucaire. He was for a time leading man with Robert Downing and then took a turn at the stock business, playing leads with the Alcazar and Grand Opera House companies, San Francisco, and later accepted a flattering offer from the Thanhouser company of Milwaukee where he remained for three years. Then followed the principal stock theatres in Philadelphia, Nashville, Toronto, Chicago, Pittsburg and the Yorkville Stock Company in New York City. He has played over 1,000 different leading roles during his career, and in every respect he is a thoroughly trained and skilled actor.

Abelard and Heloise.

Heloise was noted as much for her intellectual ability as for her personal beauty. She was familiar with the literature of four or five languages—Italian, French, Greek, Latin and Hebrew. Her knowledge was remarkable for her conversational powers were brilliant. It was her boldness, and her marvel learning that first attracted the attention of Abelard. Abelard died 1142, Heloise 1164. They lie buried at St. Marcel. Abelard's remains were shifted several times, but finally reached the well-known tomb at Pere-le-Chaise, where also rest the ashes of Heloise.—New York American.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Britain's New Premier.

Herbert H. Asquith, the new prime minister and first lord of the admiralty of Great Britain, has been chancellor of the exchequer in the Campbell-Bannerman cabinet since December, 1905, when it was formed. During the illness of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, who he succeeds, he has officiated as spokesman for the government. The new premier is a Yorkshireman, about fifty-six years old. He was a protege of William E. Gladstone, whose whole attention was attracted to him by a speech he made at a dinner of the Eighty club a good many years ago. Mr. Gladstone saw the possibilities in the young man, and Mr. Asquith's political future was assured from that time.

He is a remarkably able lawyer, with a fondness for epigrams, and is considered one of the keenest debaters on the commons has known since Mr. Disraeli died. He is humble, too, for all his calm demeanor, and is always at work. He has been a long man since he was sent to parliament in 1886 for East Fife, when Mr. Gladstone at once took him off the benches and made him secretary of state for home affairs.

Mr. Asquith is a man of strong likes and dislikes, one of his pet overdoses being the house of lords. Wherever occasion arises he advocates its abolition.

An Expert on Manuscripts.

Herbert Putnam is doing very well with the library of congress, and he never did a better thing for it than when he secured Worthington C. Ford as the head of the manuscript department. There among the stacks he keeps his eye out for manuscripts. His father during the long association with Greeley in the Tribune accumulated a lot of pamphlets and some manuscripts, but Worthington buys something worth while for the government. He has enriched the library, and he himself is so rich in his learning that congressmen have to take him on faith. They go up to his desk, and in the presence of a constituent they timidly pretend to a friendship with him that they know is hollow, and they hurry away lest he should find them out. Out of his presence they tell their constituent what a great man Ford is, just as if they knew all about it. Malcolm Ford, Paul Leicester Ford and Worthington C. Ford—three brothers, all notable in their way, and now Worthington is working on alone and is doing his share well. He is well up in the library of congress.—Harper's Weekly.

Judge Gray of Delaware.

Judge George Gray of Delaware, whose friends intend to present his name to the national democratic convention at Denver next July, is well qualified to fill any position to which he may be chosen. The record of his public service is long and creditable.

Judge Gray is a native of Delaware, by profession a lawyer, and a sixty-eight years old. From 1885 to 1889 he represented his state in the United States senate, and since the latter year has been United States circuit judge of the Third judicial district.

Doubtless he would regard his nomination to the other justice of the supreme court of the United States, but withhold it because he can need Mr. Gray's services more valuable in the senate. President McKinley named his one of the representatives of the United States to arrange the treaty of peace with Spain. President Roosevelt appointed him chairman of the anthracite coal strike commission, which in 1902-3 sent 100,000 men back to labor at increased wages and better living conditions. Judge Gray is unalterably opposed to the admission of Asiatic labor into this country.

Taxed.

The schoolboy whom his taxed top the beardless youth manages his taxed horse with a laxed bridle on a taxed road; and the dying Englishman, pronouncing his medicine, which has paid seven per cent, into a system that has paid 10 per cent, sings himself to sleep upon his chief tax, which has paid 25 per cent, and expires in the arms of an apothecary who has paid a license of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death.—Sydney Smith.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Clothes Moths.

Clothes moths are not very among pests as that one gives plenty of light. A good sifting before putting the clothes away is the best element of precaution against the ravages of clothes destroying moths. These insects are late feeders. They eat most or far, but not voraciously. They work on stored furs and carpets as well as upon common woolens and furs. The clothes moths fly in the evening and dart quickly from side to side in the light. We have two species, in one of which the larva forms a case, the other larva living free.

A paper sack is the best protection against the pest of clothes moths. If a paper sack or other paper cannot be secured, then by folding in the edges of large sheets of paper so that they interlock we can make paper cases of the required size. The rolls should be tightly twisted. Moth balls or powdered naphthaline should be placed inside these sacks. Oil of cedar will also prevent the moths from laying their eggs.

Cold Tomato Sauce.

Peel and chop fine a half peck of tomatoes. Drain through colander. Chop fine two large stalks of celery, two large red peppers, half cupful of chopped onions, half cupful of grated horseradish, one cupful of dark and yellow mustard seeds mixed, one cupful of brown sugar, half cupful of salt, one teaspoonful each of ground cinnamon, mace, clover and black pepper, two teaspoonfuls of allspice and one quart of the best cider vinegar. Mix well together, put in two quart glass jars and seal. It needs no cooking and will keep for a year.

Moths in Pianos.

When the moths in felt are found in various parts of the piano it is evident that the tiny silver moth is at work and will in due time do much damage. Camphor gum tied in chamois bags suspended in the piano will drive them out, while placing a half cup of turpentine therein, sealing for several days, will be certain of driving out the little pests.

Flavored For Gloves.

To clean an old glove in its gloves make a thick suds by boiling a handful of flaxseed and adding a little disinfected toilet soap. Then when the mixture cools put the gloves on the hands and rub them with a piece of white flannel wet with the mixture. Do not wet the gloves three-fo.

DUSTPOUR TRAY.

The pan can be easily carried about without spilling the contents. When closed the cover rests upon the bottom of the pan, the handle at the point being slightly raised, presenting a barrier to the fine dust in the pan and preventing it falling out when the pan is tilted. A spring attached to the cover securely holds it in either an open or closed position.

To Hang Heavy Pictures.

In hanging pictures with wire after putting the wire through the ring twist a few times, then bend the wire downward and twist the other way to the ring again. Then it can't unravel by itself. This is important with heavy pictures.—Good Housekeeping.

Make Washing Easy.

Put the clothes to soak in cold water first; then make a suds, using soap and a generous handful of borax. Add to the boiled of clothes and let soak overnight. The next morning rub through lightly and boil. They will be much whiter than when washed without the borax.

Korean English.

Our translator has handed in the following conundrum: The magistrate of Pulk Chyon Mr. Pulk Inki asked the dismissing for own position and said that he is impossible to suppress the insurgents as he is quite ignorance of any education, otherwise there are nothing to help the people but trouble. —Korea Daily News.

Don't Neglect It

It is a serious mistake to neglect a weak heart. It is such a short step to chronic heart disease. When you notice irregularity of action, occasioning short breath, palpitation, fluttering, pain in chest or difficulty in lying on left side, your heart needs help—a strengthening tonic. There is no better remedy than Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. Its strengthening influence is felt almost at once.

"I have used 16 bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and can truthfully say it has done me good. I feel like a new man. I can now sleep soundly and do nearly everything that I know of. The fever which attended me ceased the minute I was taking and I told him I would be well in a few days if I was going to do me any good, but I did. I have not taken any for a year and while there is sometimes a little weakness I feel that I can do a day's work enough for me to continue the use of the medicine. If I should feel ill, I would know what to do. Take Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and I will be well."—Mrs. Mary Hopkins, Lexington, Texas.

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails to do good, druggist will refund the money.

CURRENCY BILL PASSES.

Measure Is Forced Through Despite Filibustering Tactics.

Washington correspondence:

With the end of the most remarkable filibuster in the history of the Senate came the passage of the Aldrich-Vreeland emergency currency bill by both houses and the winding up of other business the Sixty-ninth Congress adjourned sine die at 11:20 o'clock Saturday night.

At 4 p.m. o'clock the Senate adopted the report of the conferees of the two houses on the currency bill by the decisive vote of 47 to 22, and this was taken to the House and congressional leaders by a messenger. Speaker Cannon announced the conclusion of emergency currency legislation, toward which Congress has strived its principal effort since it convened last December. The result came unexpectedly to-day, but not until the Senate had been for six hours and a half, almost without interruption, in the throes of a filibuster of unusual duration.

Senator La Follette ended his record breaking speech at 7:30 a. m. Saturday he was still in strong voice, and said that he was "reluctant to yield the floor, but realized that other business must be transacted."

Many of the Senators were rouse out of bed Friday night and early Saturday morning and brought into the chamber to make a quorum. Among the absentees were Senator Scott and the Senate leaders directing that it would not be good policy to allow them to make an uninterrupted night's rest and be fresh for the task of continuing the filibuster begun by Mr. La Follette. Many of the Senators were brought in partly dressed by the deputy sergeant-at-arms.

President Roosevelt was summoned late to-night to sign bills during the last hours of Congress at 9 o'clock. He was waited upon by a committee comprising Representatives Payne, Hepburn and Williams, and Senators Hale and Teller. Shortly before 10 o'clock he signed the conference currency bill, previous to his signature of the emergency bill the President had handed to Secretary Cortelyou, who carefully read the provisions. Two other members of the Cabinet were present—Secretaries Root and Garfield.

Case Against the Buttercup.

Dr. W. N. Shaffitt, who recently arrived in Chicago from Manila, says the cause of measles are due to the poison contained in the common field buttercup, now adds to the indictment against this flower that it effects good remedies by scarcely ling than it probably the origin of cancer and other maladies. He has found that it contains a number of active principles, one of which, if taken internally, may cause death.

Girl of Three Potions Sixty Sister.

Elizabeth Hoopenbiles, aged 18 months, was instantly killed in Chatham by strychnine powders given to her by her sixty-year-old aunt, aged 3. Mrs. Hoopenbiles, mother of the children, got the poisoned powders from Dr. Edward Johnson. Aunt saw the powders, and, thinking them candy, gave them to her sister.

PRINCIPAL FIGURES IN THE SNELL WILL CONTEST.

SNELL WILL IS VOID.

Indiana Man Shot Himself After Attempting to Carry Off Woman.

An inquest held in Indianapolis recently resulted the other afternoon in the shooting and death of W. W. Patterson, of Colorado "Tom" Snell, the recently old millionaire, as the ground that he was insane at the time the will was written.

The verdict reports Kingsmen Colonel Snell's fortune in the Snell Snell 35 years a week, the leveling of it makes his estate a millionaire. Model Snell Mansion, the prelude of the dead man, who was by the will to receive $12,000 a year, gets nothing.

The case attracted much attention because of the number of women involved. Many women, some of them members of prominent Illinois families, were here between the old colonel which brought these rich relatives in the way of gifts, mostly of money, from Snell. Among the persons involved and who were here were brought out at the first trial were the wife and daughter of Rev. E. A. Hamilton, Hill the most intimate of the other women those and to leave come from Mattie Snell McNamara, whom Snell was with his alone, but whose relationship was denied by the contestants. She is to be left a legacy of $10,000 from the estate. Her husband was present.

Mrs. Mary Snell Dinsmore, the wife of Snell's impecunious half-brother, William Snell, was present. Mrs. Dinsmore was the principal witness against the will. She testified that Snell was insane, but she admitted that she had received from Snell a diamond ring, a gold watch and a gold chain, and that Snell had given her money on several occasions.

Mrs. Marcellus Snell Schuyler, the wife of Snell's impecunious half-brother, was present. Mrs. Schuyler testified that Snell was insane, but she admitted that she had received from Snell a diamond ring, a gold watch and a gold chain, and that Snell had given her money on several occasions.

Mrs. Richard Snell, the wife of Snell's half-brother, was present. Mrs. Richard Snell testified that Snell was insane, but she admitted that she had received from Snell a diamond ring, a gold watch and a gold chain, and that Snell had given her money on several occasions.

Col. Thomas Snell, the brother of the deceased, testified that Snell was insane.

WORK OF CONGRESS

In the Senate, Thursday, the consideration of the conference report on the currency bill occupied practically all the time until the bill was finally passed and signed by the President. Senator Aldrich briefly explained the provisions of the measure, which was introduced by Senator Collier, chairman of the committee, and who, from all indications, is the most capable and competent authority on the subject in the Senate

Report of Grade Examination.

The result of the grade examination this year, while not as satisfactory as we hope future results will be, was on the whole, very gratifying. In all, 162 students wrote the examination.

This included the classes from the village schools numbering in all about 100. The report this year shows a decided improvement in the matter of averages. Students are balancing up better and show that the entire course is being evenly brought up.

Other reports will show many students who have excellent standings in some branches would fail very low in others. The report this year shows a decided improvement in this line and also shows a very much higher general average than former reports have shown. Rural conditions also show very decided improvements along these same lines. The percentage of students passing this year is higher than that of any previous year, all of which shows that the general condition of the schools, both rural and village, is improving.

A careful examination of the reports will also show that the students making the best showing were in most cases, those who come from schools taught by trained teachers which is another proof that a fund of general knowledge is not all that is necessary in the makeup of a good teacher. The teacher who has had the advantage of a normal training or else has had some years of training in the actual school room work invariably produces the better results. Even though the other one may be the more brilliant in the matter of what might be termed shreed knowledge.

We will not give the names of the village students who passed the examination as they will reach the public through the school reports. Out of a total of 61 rural students who wrote the examination, diplomas were issued to 32 and many of the others made an excellent showing and could, if they would spend a little time in reviewing, do good work in the ninth grade next year.

The following is a list of the rural students to whom eighth grade diplomas were issued.

A Grand Family Medicine.

"It gives me pleasure to speak a good word for Electric Bitters," writes Mrs. Anna Gaither of Mt. Zion, Houston St., New York. "It's a grand family medicine for dyspepsia and liver complaintes; while for lame back and weak kidneys it cannot be too highly recommended." Electric Bitters regulate the digestive functions, purify the blood, and impart renewed vigor and vitality to the weak and debilitated of both sexes. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Some Boyne City people seem terribly worked up over the fact that W. D. Moyer, leader of the band at that place is true enough to his convictions to refuse to conduct the band in furnishing music for Sunday ball games.

East Jordan Herald: Upon complaint of J. B. Eddy, general State Deputy game and fish warden, John Coffey of Mancelona, a wholesale fish dealer of that place was arrested for having in his possession white fish under two pounds. As the case could not be tried in the same county that the alleged offense was committed in, the case was brought before Justice F. E. Bontinger, Thursday. Mr. Coffey waived a jury trial and the Justice found him guilty, fining him $100 and costs. Mr. Coffey immediately appealed the case and he was released on a recognizance bond of $200. We understand Mr. Coffey intends to test the case in the supreme court.

Ellsworth Independent: Wm. Ingalls died at his home in Kearney township Wednesday, May 20, after a long illness resulting from blood poison, and the funeral services were held at his late home on Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, the Rev. M. L. Norris of the M. E. Church at the Masonic fraternity conducting the services. Mr. Ingalls was born in Genesee county, Mich. June 24, 1839. He came to Antrim county in 1865, and had been a continuous resident since that time. For seven years his home was at Stover and the last five years were spent on the place near Stover, where he died. In his life time Mr. Ingalls held the esteem of all who knew him. He was originally a member of North Star Lodge at Torch Lake, but afterward transferred to Bellaire Lodge, No. 325.

Petoskey Record: A tentative proposition to provide Petoskey with an electric street railway and also to purchase the city electric lighting plant, and run both the electric street railway and the lighting plant from one and the same electric power station, was brought to the attention of the common council at its Monday evening session. The parties asking a franchise propose to install a modern electric street railway in Petoskey, and connect Petoskey thereby with neighboring towns and resorts. It is alleged to be possible to have part of the railway in operation this year, if action is prompt. The parties seeking a franchise say they will take over the light plant either on a long lease or a sale outright. They claim that they can operate an electric railway and an electric light plant together cheaper and maintain better service than separately. The letter of inquiry is dated in Chicago and signed H. H. Beach.

East Jordan Enterprise: Mrs. Elizabeth Weikel passed away at her residence on state st. Monday morning, May 25th. Elizabeth Catherman was born in Union county, Pennsylvania, November 15th, 1826. Here she grew to womanhood and in 1842 married to Jesse Weikel, who preceded her in death three years ago. Four children were born to them, Howard Weikel, of this place, Mrs. Mary Jones, of Sacramento, California, Mrs. Brown, who preceded her mother in the great beyond, and Under Sheriff W. J. Weikel, of Charlevoix. Mr. and Mrs. Weikel with their family came to East Jordan in the fall of 1867 and homesteaded what is now known as the F. K. Winters farm just north of town. They were among the first settlers here, at that time there being not so much as an Indian wigwam where our humming little city now stands. Through good and bad times and the changes they have brought Mrs. Weikel has been loved and respected by all who knew her, and a large circle of friends extend their sincerest sympathy to the sorrowing family in their bereavement. The funeral services were held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the apartments she has occupied for several years, being conducted by Rev. A. D. Gilgedy of the Presbyterian church.

Much Good in Life After All.

In the forthcoming production of Edwin Milton Royle's play, "My Boy Jack," which will appear at the Charlevoix Theatre Saturday, June 13th, we will have the opportunity of witnessing a play while the author is in the height of his popularity. Not after his decline, not after his death, or after the play has been hacked about the country by infestor companies, or stolen and produced by repertoire companies, and given in a slip shod manner under various names, thereby robbing a valuable piece of property, but we will have the pleasure of seing a play written in Mr. Royle's happiest vein, with his well known blending of comedy and pathos, one moment a laugh, the next a tear, then a burst of hilarity surmounted by an intense dramatic effect; startling by its realism, and impressive from its truth. In this play Mr. Royle has given to the public all that is best in him, it is the child of his heart, his brain, his maturing manhood, and not one auditor can leave the theatre without feeling that he has been well repaid for lending his presence to this production. He will have seen a good clean play, he has had a hearty side splitting laugh, he has felt the tears come to his eyes, his blood tingle, his pulse quicken. He has been taken away from the hum drum of life into an atmosphere of variety, action, and interest, and he goes to his home feeling that there is much good in life after all. This play will be produced by an excellent company, headed by Eugene Moore, who made such signal success last year as Edmund Dantes in "Monte Cristo." It has been stipulated by Mr. Royle in his contracts with Fred. C. Conrad, the Manager, that no one but Mr. Moore shall present the part of Jack Paden in his play, "My Boy, Jack."

Pagan now has the field in the Vandette line, and is putting up some very fine attractions. Pagan has hung on in the face of opposition, and is entitled to a good patronage now.

—Anthony Malloy, of St. James, is in town today, on business.

—Mr. J. Wirth, of Frankfort, is visiting Mrs. A. B. Dunscher for a few weeks.

—Miss Gertie Segal, of Harbor Springs, has been the guest of Miss Sarah Lastman several days.

—Mr. and Mrs. Will Muntings and little daughter, of Racine, Wis., are here visiting Mrs. Muntings's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Miller.

—We care nothing for the pea crop, the beet crop, the corn crop, or the potato crop. We have sixteen hills of cucumbers and twenty tomato plants out in the old barn yard. If they fail we are a ruined man.

—John O'Neill, G. C. Gelken and other smaller fishermen, have laid up their catches and the low price of fish in the Chicago market. It is not thought that this condition will last long.

—The Ninth Annual Convention of the Charlevoix County Sunday School Association will be held in East Jordan, June 23, 24th. Interdenominational. Everybody invited. East Jordan will give county delegates a right royal welcome.

—Mr. H. A. Ward, of the Ward & Maloney Automobile Co., of Cheboygan, Mich., and wife, sister of Paul Major drove through in their car with a party of automobiles to this city from Cheboygan to spend Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Paul Major.

—There is not a place in Northern Michigan where you can so pleasantly pass the 4th of July as in Charlevoix. We have more and greater natural attractions; we have magnificent surroundings, both in land and water, and the finest shaded streets in Northern Michigan. Spend your 4th in Charlevoix.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. N. Chapel entertained friends at a house party at their north side residence from Friday of last week to Tuesday of this week. Visiting friends were Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Sly, Miss Ruth Sly, Mr. and Mrs. Orville Atwood and three sons, all of Bay Shore, Mr. and Mrs. Homer Sly and daughter of Elk Rapids, and Mrs. O. A. Sears of this city.

—Dr. and Mrs. Carlstedt spent the past week at Hortons Bay as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dilworth. Dr. Carlstedt, who is interested by his wife, is spending the summer at the O. S. Washburn home on Park avenue. The Doctor, who was formerly a popular Charlevoix physician, and is now a Chicago practitioner, is in poor health, and hopes to be benefitted by his sojourn here, where he has spent nearly every summer since his removal. He has very many friends here who hope for his complete recovery.

—A St. Joseph special says: The finest noticeable shipment of what gives promise to be the biggest crop of strawberries raised in Michigan was made Monday evening, when local boats carried nearly 100 cases of berries across Lake Michigan to Chicago. Present indications are that the strawberry crop will be so large as to glut the market when heavy shipments begin. The result will be that prices will be forced down so as to be practically profitless to fruit growers. Five cent berries are looked for when picking grows heavy.

—Today, in this city, occurs the 25th annual visit of the Charlevoix county Knights of Pythias, embracing Charlevoix, Boyne City and East Jordan lodges. The gathering will occur in the park, and will be addressed by Hon. Geo. G. Covell, the next nominee of Congress from this district. During the day there will be organized a county mutual death benefit association, similar to those now operated by the Masons and Odd Fellows. The hour of our going to press prevents a more extended notice, but the gathering is expected to be an important one.

Will Celebrate July 4th.

Charlevoix will celebrate the 4th of July. The various committees are at work on the details, and we may expect a day of unalloyed enjoyment.

There will be a band contest, a baby show, base ball, industrial parade, life savers drill, and all the side attractions that make the 4th of July the day of the year.

Posters will be out this week, and programs will soon be issued, giving full information.

Come to Charlevoix the 4th.

An Excellent Record.

With the closing commencement event for 1908 W. H. Woodley, superintendent of the Charlevoix schools, closed his third year in that capacity, and has been re-engaged by the board.

We doubt if there is a person in Charlevoix, of ordinary reasoning power, who will question the wisdom of the board in retaining Mr. Woodley. As an educator with executive authority, Mr. Woodley is more different kinds of a success than any superintendent who has preceded him in many years.

The superintendency of a "lay-out" of public schools, is a trying position, and it goes without saying that educational attainments are not the only requisites for success. He is usually under fire both from within and without. He generally has a bunch of "Indians" in the senior class who carry tomahawks and scalping knives, and who have reached that age land athletic development when revolt against "Prof." is as easy as it is against the umpire in the field. It is the average nature of the animal everywhere. If "Prof." can keep his seat on the safety valve he is lucky. He must speak softly and carry a big stick," and many times he is tempted to use the big stick. His sense of duty as a disciplinarian and his self-respect are frequently in a clinch. Yet this same bunch, as a unit, will, as a rule, eat up the man who says a word against "Prof." This is the inside phase of the subject.

Outside is that invisible circuit of sympathy or its opposite that exists between the superintendent's office and the tax-paying school patron, many of whom, if educated at all, received their training in a school where the boys sat on one side, the girls on the other with a big box-stove between. They have as little conception of the trials and responsibilities of a modern superintendent as they have of the conjunction of the planets. With the superintendent it is a struggle between a frown and a smile from September to June, and sometimes serious prostration from June to September.

We do not aim to be fulsome in our praise of any man, but we cannot suppress the conviction that superintendent Woodley has, during his three years of work here, displayed more of the diversified qualities required to meet and overcome these elements of discouragement than the average of teachers. We note at the head of a modern school can for a moment hope to please all, but we believe a large majority of the people of Charlevoix are satisfied with the work of Mr. Woodley.

We are glad he is to remain, and hope the coming school year will be, if possible, more successful than the last.

Giving his also-there a resolute, fatalistic shrug, Sarto stepped out of his stationery and, locking the door behind him, went leisurely down to dinner. In the saloon-lounge the few remained people were still scattered about, mostly standing in the chairs of table d'hote, and more than one hitherto turned around or gazed up over his newspaper at the sight of the distinguished looking foreigner ascending by.

Absente was so ably worth having!

With a sense of satisfaction that amounted to positive elation, Sarto opened the door on his left. Before him glimmered a river of light, lined a river of fawn-coats and women of varying tints, plying knives and forks as gaily as silently.

Perfectly conscious of the eyes that followed him, the new prince walked slowly up the length of the room between rows of waiters, his eyes well to the front, where a chair had been already drawn out for him, far up at the captain's right.

It was as he sat down, with a bow to his uniformed host, not for his glance under lids aimed but at Sarto experienced his second shock that day, and a startling one indeed. For on lamed the silver surprise of it staggered him completely. Turning, recovering himself with supreme effort, he lifted his immaculate and ruled stiffly across the table.

Yes, there they were—there was no mistake—the two pairs of eyes he had wished or expected to see—Mrs. Richard Waring, Miss Waring, Miss Daisy and Hugh Englebaum!

After all, why had he not thought of the possibility? It was just like Gossip, after laying her plans for a protracted stay in London, suddenly to take possession of home.

Raising his head, the chauffeur glanced rapidly over the tables, his quick eye picking out at a glance the ruddy face of Englebaum. Surrounded! Hemmed in on all sides! His lips twitched. The situation was positively comic in its diffidence. Hugh Englebaum, and all alone! breaking bread together! What a position!

"Hesse's up," Sarto told himself similarly, and, filling his eyes on the menu card, he sacrificed the inevitable chuckle.

But it was long in coming! Over and over the chauffeur conned that interminable list of dishes, his ears on the alert for developments across the table; yet nothing happened, the flinkle of glasses and the clatter of cutlery continuing unbroken.

What did it mean?

At last the waiter, at a voice opposite made him pick up his ears. "I told you Heaven's sake no more Hugh! Don't be a Hugh! Call me Daisy!" "Not in your life, Miss Daisy!"

"Where?" Sarto experienced a false thrill at the clear-cut, well-known tones. "Down Italy! That second cousin to your left. Look! Four seats from the left!"

But Gossie did not look! Under his lowered eye-lids the man opposite was uneasily conscious that her gaze was upon him curiously, interpretively—he had recognized him!

Taking a little gold pencil out of his pocket, Sarto began, with perfect self-possession, to scrawl a few words on his bill-of-fare for her next notice.

What would she do?

Instantly the note was upon him shifted, then they came back again. Gossie put up her hand and lightly tonched her lips, the fleetest, lightest fingers jetting a look here, a call there, a characteristic gesture, this of hers. Why, the bird was actually plotting Italy! At whose behest?

There was a moment's silence.

"If Mr. Blankck is really on board," Mrs. Waring finally, in deliberate cadences, "what do you suppose he means?"

Gerald hesitated a moment. "Perhaps," he suggested significantly, "it means that a friend of yours is on board, too!"

It was a tremendous moment.

Hearing the call to the waiter, with a low-toned direction, Sarto now raised his head and looked deliberately across the table, his eye encountering those of the woman opposite in a steady, impenetrable stare. To his surprise, Mrs. Waring looked away, blushing faintly, and set down her wine glass with a little click.

"Well, I've quite finished," she announced, glancing at her party; "how about you? Shall we go up on deck and have coffee?"

The girl beside her acquiesced, speaking for the first time, and Sarto, with his avowed epithet, Sarto watched the familiar procession pass out of the room. Gossie taking the lead, as usual, the Englebaum bringing up the rear.

If they had recognized him, of which the chauffeur made no doubt, then, he told himself, there must be or been a mutual silent decision to avoid a scene in the saloon. Probably the arrest would be made as soon as he left the ship.

"After dinner, the deluge" quoth Sarto, the philosopher, paraphrasing a famous maxim, and, true to the teachings of Miss de Pompadour, he set forth on his evening stroll. It was some time later that his eventful meal ended, the meek prince stepped out of the saloon and, standing in the lee of the outer door, placidly lit a cigar. What a night of enchantment it was!

Low in the heavens, over the luminous, palpitating ocean dangled the full moon and great, golden stars—not from 3, 4, 5, sounding the waves, a ladder of light long enough, each rung gilded with silver. Not a breath of air moved, the throbbing of the screw alone breaking the mystic stillness.

Glancing about him cautiously, Sarto took in one quick survey of the saloon-lounge and down the deck, and then drew back with sudden swiftness into the deep shadow, his cigar bitten right between his teeth, his brow contracting, as he watched two familiar figures go by under the Japanese lanterns, the first, they past, a breath of violets following the swish of Gossie's skirts, when the man in the doorway sprang forward and picked up something that whirled over the deck in her wake.

What should he do with it?

Grasping the white bit—thing, he started after the couple, twisting his thin lips uncertainly. Fate had thrown him the girl's handkerchief, with some devious end in view. Why not run the chance now?

"What a grisly suggestion!" Mrs. Waring abruptly. "There's Mr. Blanck." This with a sudden relief. "I think I am going to join him and walk up and down a bit. If you and the prince will excuse me, Gossie."

Holding on to the rail, she made her way off unsteadily. Watching the small figure, Sarto was so absorbed in his own speculations that it was with a start he became conscious of a voice beside him.

"Dead! just think," it said, in languid, recent hoarse accents, "that poor dead-head and my diamonds have acoshed quite enough of the conversation! It seems to me that you and I, prince, have a thousand other things in common."

TEA FROM THE FLOWERS.

Tea, not from the leaves, but from the flowers alone of the plant, is rarely encountered in commerce. The petals, stamens, etc., are sun-dried, and the resulting tea is of a rich, deep brown hue of peculiarly delicate odor and gives a pale amber colored infusion rather more astringent in taste than that from the average fair grade neat. The taste for it is an acquired one, and even if this tea could be made commercially possible, it is doubtful if it would ever become popular.

The American tea trade would advantageously take a suggestion from the brick-tea of the far east. In our country, the tea dust, some of which is of local quality, is not properly utilized. In Europe it is a regular article of trade, and it is advertised and sold as such. In America it is sold to thousands of cheap restaurants, who make from it the mixture of tannic acid, sugar and boiled milk which they sell as "tea." If, as to the critical, this dust has never reached the ultimate, it is not because it is "tea" of no value, but because it would be made from it, and the product would not reach a ready market through the attitude of mind for which it is adopted. A beginning in this direction has been made by the Pingsuei tea estate in South Carolina, and in Europe similar advances have been recognized.

The virgin tea (Hoyt-Sei-Ki), so called from its use at Chinese weddings, is the sun-dried leaf intact, filled up with these spirals of colored silk, offered as a gift. Some fragrant little bundles are pickled in vinegar and used as salad. This tea is sold in especially handsome silk-covered and glass-topped boxes. The rarest of all teas, and one that has never been known to reach this country, is a naturally sweet tea, produced in western China on a very limited scale. Its culture is centuries old, and the secret has been jealously guarded from generation to generation. The sacrificially is probably due to grafting and years of patient study and care, such as only the small Chinese can farmer is capable of bestowing.—Scientific American.

JAPANESE AS DOMESTICS.

Make Themselves Useful, but Seem Not to Capacity of Sales.

Since the wholesale discharge of Japanese from duty in the office of the Japanese consul, hundreds of the little fellows in New York seeking employment. These ex-navy officers, valets-de-luxe, gentlemen grooms, "radio amiks" waiters, etc., are thoroughly disciplined, says the New York Press.

They are very polite, quiet and their valves are golden-being silent. If these men have faults they do not show them. They are not holding themselves on cheap shoulders. Only the green ones will accept $25 a month. A trained valet, butler, general houseworker or small man-about-the house wants $30 or more.

To have a diminutive Jap trotting in and out between the house ready at every one's beck and call, ever cheerful, ever willing, ever ready to answer a change from Marie, Jessie, Charlotte, Mary, Louise, Amelia, Maggie, Nora, Ellen, Nellie, Lizzie, Annie and Bridget. Hear the children lisping Ki, Yamaguchi, Asaki, Tojo, Saki, Mori, Gibel, Sonyasaki, Yoshee, Taky, Kamokoto, Ituchi, Inumaki, Mahoto and Matsui.

The Japanese seem to possess a strange prostitution for domestic service. Perhaps it is because the Chinese want either a blunder or some heavy outdoor work, use rattled employees. As soon as possible they set up in business for themselves and make thrifty merchants.

The Japanese are supposed to be the most expert gardeners and florists in the world, but do you ever see them seeking employment in either capacity? It seems to be their purpose to "get next to, as the phrase goes, to any on in our homes, picking up information on a thousand and one subjects for the benefit of the government at home.

Non-Red Clover Is Found.

The bureau of Plant Industry has been experimenting with a new form of red clover which comes from the black soil region of Russia. The plant is practically hairless and therefore does not hold dust like the common red clover.

For this reason it is believed that it will make a better forage plant for horses, since it will be much less likely to cause heaves and will be cleaner and more convenient to handle. Heaves is a disease which is very prevalent in the presence of hairs on common clover. If this be true the result would be obtained by feeding them the new hairless red clover.

Another objection to the common red clover is that it matures much earlier than timothy, with which it is usually sown. it is thus impossible to harvest the mixture at a time when the full value of both the clover and timothy can be obtained.

The new red clover matures two weeks later than the common red blossom, and is thus in the majority of cases ready for harvest at the same time with the timothy. The new variety is also hardier, contains more of the clover leaf, and yields a crop without injury by rain.

Effect of Heavy Gas Tire.

The firing of a big gun causes necessarily a jar in the form of eight out of ninety-six soldiers.

"It's always best to lower the wave," Sarto told himself, with unconscious irony, as he set out along the deck, quickly to keep his steps to catch up with the loitering pair.

"Pardon, madame—"

He saw them stop, and felt Gossie turn her head inquiringly.

"Here attending, lad, on hand, "I think you dropped this" he said, speaking in English and holding the handkerchief out to her with a grace that was half gaze, half grin, half daring defiance, for Gossie who ever sure fell of recognition.

"Thank you very much," she said, taking her possession without looking at it and, with a little hesitation, "don't this in Pitti di Pitti." The captain told me that he set opposite to us at dinner."

Holding himself well in hand, Sarto addressed to her.

Mrs. Waring smiled. "I feel as if I know Your Highness already," she said, "through my old friend Count Scarnafel, of the Italian Legation. I wonder if he ever found his spare of Mrs. Richard Waring?"

With his self-possession miraculously restored, Mrs. Waring's chauffeur bowed over the hand so graciously outstretched to him.

"I have heard your name, madame, so often from my sister, Lucia Pinelli, Countess Scarnafel, Duchess Sonzaldi." He laughed, with a new confidence, for the Countess's keen romancing. "Why, we were stopping together only last spring!"

At this point another wave broke in, and Sarto, with a little bow to the third, introducing himself with his usual assurance, "Hugh Englebaum!"

"Charmed," declared the Prince de Pelos.

Clicking his heels together, he bowed again, conscious of the fact that Hugh Englebaum's straightforward bluntness was as open as the proverbial barn door. Not a shade of suspicion, not a sign of the hunted look in the hard, brown eyes of the slaven engineer.

Behind the lifted parasols the eyes of Ludovic Sarto, chauffeur, gleamed with satisfaction at his own assuring good fortune. On these two he had accepted him without reserve! Theirs be the loss, then. He would play the game for all it was worth.

"We were just about to join my cousin, Miss Hancroft," Gossie explained, leading the way around the deck, "you know she is—"

"Annette, this is the Prince del Pino!" She set down next to the girl and said, laughingly, "I was just telling Mr. Blanck 'Won't Your Highness join us?' You see, Mr. Hugh is evidently going to dance for a session. Perhaps you will take his place?"

With a murmured word of thanks, Sarto slipped into the low, easy chair, his mind going back instinctively to a certain tea party when he had last taken Mr. Hugh's place—when the London chauffeur had been first allowed the honor of sitting by Miss Waring.

What a turning of tables to-night! "It's always best to lower the wave," Sarto told himself, with unconscious irony, and, as he set along the deck, quickly to keep his steps to catch up with the loitering pair.

IMPORTANCE OF PATIENCE.

By Rev. Dewitt S. Felton.

Let patience have its perfect work.—James 1:4.

Patience is one of the most important virtues mentioned in the scriptures. We hear a great deal about faith, salvation, repentance, love, but not so much about the subject.

Patience corresponds to time in music. The events of the world and the events of our life are mixed and another as the notes do on the score. Each note requires a certain definite amount of time. Each note in the world's symphony, which we call history, requires a certain amount of time before we can pass on to the next. Time and even if this tea could be made commercially possible, it is doubtful if it would ever become popular.

The American tea trade would advantageously take a suggestion from the brick-tea of the far east. In our country, the tea dust, some of which is of local quality, is not properly utilized. In Europe it is a regular article of trade, and it is advertised and sold as such. HYMNS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

The Everlasting Rock.

O, God, the rock of ages,
Who overspread hast been,
What time the tempest rages,
Our dwelling-place to be.
Before thy first creations,
O Lord, the same as now,
To endless generations
Thou art God.

The everlasting thou!
Our years are like the shadows
On sunny hills that lie,
Or grass upon the meadows
That blossom but to die;
A sleep, a dream, a story
By Arabian pens or pilgrim told,
An unremaining glory
Of things that soon are old.

O thou, who canst not slumber,
Whose light grows never pale,
Teach us aright to number
Our years before they fail;
On us let your mercy lighten,
On us thy goodness feed,
And by the Spirit brighten
The hearts thyself hast blessed.

Lord, count our faith's endeavor
With hearty zeal with grace,
Till, richer in light forever,
We see thee face to face.
And joy no language measure,
A fountain gushing new,
An endless flow of pleasure,
An ocean without shore.

no sort of recompense? Yet in which manner does such a course differ from ours if we live day by day with the other thought than to get more and yet more out of life for ourselves. Humanity is not best. Even the forest we cut and the clothes we wear we never have asked for ourselves. Humanity's efforts of all manned have been necessary to their production.

Life for our food, our clothes, not to mention other and greater benefits, we never can repay humanity. We may earn the bread, but also shall pay the price of long age, the pallid, the melancholy, the thinker, the pioneer who gave their lives to make our wheat grain, our bread leaf intact, that up with these spirals of colored silk offer unto us these fragrant little bundles are pickled in vinegar and used as salad. WASHINGTON GOSSIP

Playing the "Star-spangled Banner" on shipboard is a ceremony which must be attended with proper respect. One of the correspondents with the cruise in fleet writes that on one relay evening, when his ship was just behind the equator, the band gave the usual concert between decks. It was so bad that the members of the band had to leave coats, and the members of the crew took off everything but their undershirts and trousers. When the time came to play the national air the leader paused the band stand, and the members of the crew came to attention; but no music was played, for not one of every man had put on his coat and hat, that patriotism might never lose its self-respect by being caught in dishabille.

The Sunday School Lesson

Subject for June 14, 1908.

Golden Text.—Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.—Matthew 28:20.

This appearance of Christ by the Sea of Galilee is given as "the third" since His resurrection (see verse 14), but they easily mean that it was the third occasion upon which He had appeared to the apostles as a company, and might not take into account, for instance, the appearance of Mary Magdalene, or the three He talked with two disciples going to Emmaus.

"There is, running through this special lesson, something which links very closely together the natural life of Jesus among His disciples with the life of the risen Christ among them. The scene is the same. They are at the lake near which the greater part of His time on earth had been spent. The disciples led by Peter, are at their old work, fishing for a livelihood, and Jesus has provided a meal for the hungry and tired men. The whole scene seems to be so familiar, so in keeping with the general and also in crease the belief that the future life of the Christ is not a close association between Christ and His disciples, as it is the fact that He would provide for them to all time. As we study the lesson, it seems probable that object then, so He would continue to direct and guide them in spiritual and

"Know Not That It Was Jesus."—At first the disciples seem to have regarded Jesus as a stranger. They did not know Him, and, as they had been on in the great haul of fish they remained silent, and, as they continued at the same sort, and recognized their Master only at last.

"John and Peter.—These two, so very different in character, were associated in the service of the Master. John seemed to have been the more, so far as we can be perceived that it was Jesus who had called to them it was he first to recognize the Master, and exclaim, "It is the Lord." There must have been a strong resemblance between the two, for no other reason than that they were both of a contemplative cast of mind.

"Verses 9, 10.—Jesus had food prepared, yet He asked the disciples to bring some of the fish they had just caught. Jesus always seems to invite the participation of His partnership with them, in the work, though He does it so adroitly that they seem to make use of their labors. Many of His miracles had an apparent waste, and they had grown accustomed no doubt to seeing something left over.

"Jesus Taketh the Bread, and Giveth Them.—Jesus seems to be as much at home and as secure. He is always the host at every feast, for He is the Creator and upholder of all things. And He always ministers to others.

"More Than These?"—Peter had been a bit proud in his declaration that though all others should leave Jesus he, at least, would not; and yet, he had not, after all, the assurance he had at first. So there would be a sting in this question for Peter. It was a searching sting. Peter needed to see that he was not the man he imagined himself. His answer showed that a old reliance was gone, and he dared not drew any comparisons between himself and the others.

"The Supreme Test of Love.—Jesus is the Light of the world; He is both the Lamb of God and the Shepherd. His character is the duty of His disciples to introduce Him to the world. But they can only do so in proportion as they themselves feed on Him and live in His light. The "Take, on!" and the "Drink ye all of it" of the Holy Supper are a continual reminder to us of Jesus as the Bread of Life, and of the dividing of the blood for us. As He comes to feed our souls it is His commission that the world should be fed on Him. Therefore His injunction to Peter: "Feed My lambs" and "Feed My sheep."

How is the great proof of love to feed Jesus in a disciple, but the disciple shall do all he can to bring the light of life and the food of life to starving souls.

That this incident should never be studied without noticing the gentleness with which Jesus treated Peter, is a fault. The ground and secrets what Peter is also to be relieved from his judicial duties.

In the Greek of the New Testament there are two words for love—agapao and phileo. The first denotes the highest form of love, the union of sympathy and self-sacrifice; it is the love that prompts the disciple to feed from his life, the second denotes the natural love of friend for friend.

Jesus said to Peter, Simon, son of John, dost thou love Me more than these? Peter replied, Yes, Lord, Thou knowest that I love (philo) Thee. He had only could not assert that he loved Jesus more than the others, but could not even claim that his love was of the highest kind; but he was quite sure that he loved Jesus as his friend and master.

Then Jesus dropped the question of comparison and the other disciples and asked His question again: "Simon, son of John, lovest thou (agapao) Me?" In this way He emphasized the difference between the two kinds of love. But Peter stood on the higher love, so again he replied, "Yes, Lord, Thou knowest that I love (philo) Thee."

Then Jesus came right down to Peter's level. Jesus is

THE FARMERS' FRIEND

The Republican Party's Aid to Agriculture.

HOME MARKET PROTECTED.

All Parts of the Country Have Felt the Beneficial Result of Its Statesmanship, Which Must Continue Four Years Longer—Facts to Ponder.

Nebraska is the controlling portion of the speech of Representative Pollard of Nebraska in the house March 26.

The organic act creating the department of agriculture was passed during the administration of Abraham Lincoln, the first president the Republican party gave to the country. In all thirty laws have been passed bearing on the question of agriculture since 1862. Of these laws just three came from the hands of the democratic party.

Every one of the other twenty-seven laws was enacted by the Republican party, consequently this marvelous development and growth of the department of agriculture and the beneficial results that have gone out to the people are the fruit of Republican liberality, Republican forethought and Republican statesmanship. It was the Republican party that gave to the country the origin of the present great department. It was under Republican legislation that the investigation of animal and plant diseases was begun. It was at the hands of Republican legislation that the best sugar industry, the durum and Turkey red wheats, alfalfa and improved strains of rice, cotton and tobacco were given to the country. It was Republican legislation that opened the great southwest regions of the west to settlement. It was by Republican legislation that the irrigation of the arid lands has been introduced. In this magnificent work the great Republican party has known no north, no south, no east, no west. All parts of the country have felt the beneficial results of its statesmanship.

The Republican party entered into that section of the country that above all others has done everything in its power to obstruct and block the progress of not only our party, but of the union. We went into the cotton fields of the south and taught the people there how to grow cotton and rice. We showed him how to comb the cotton, had it ready for the mill, and put on a system almost akin to scientific farming in our efforts to teach him how to grow cotton and rice at a profit. This very fall carries an appropriation of $250,000 for combating Texas fever, which is wholly confined to the south. We have produced results equally beneficial in the tobacco fields of Connecticut, Virginia, West Virginia and Kentucky; in fact, all sections of the country have been benefactors of the growth of this great department as a result of Republican statesmanship.

At the close of eleven years of Republican administration we find that the country has produced the third largest crop of corn in our history, being exceeded only in the years 1894 and 1895. The total production of corn for the year just were 2,522,520,000 bushels, and the average price throughout the country on the 1st day of December was 31.5 cents per bushel. The total production of all the farms of the United States for the last calendar year was $7,412,000,000. This is $627,000,000 more than the value of the crop of 1893.

The farmer knows that he furnishes the food for the men who work in the factories, in the mines and in the forests.

He knows that unless the factory hands, the miners and the foresters work at good wages all the time they cannot consume the maximum of food products. The farmer knows that if tariff law is enacted stripped of protection it will close 75 per cent of the factories of the country and hundreds of thousands of men will be thrown out of employment. He knows that the moment these factories close and these men are out of employment his market is interfered with. The farmers of the country know that it is this great home market that is responsible for high prices for farm products. I want to say to you that the farmers of this country will never permit this great home market to be interfered with by the Democratic party.

Gentlemen, I have too much faith in the good sense and the good judgment of the American laboring man, the American farmer and the American business man to think that they will consider for a moment the advisability of electing a Democratic president and a Democratic congress. The laboring people, the farmers and the business men of the country have great confidence in the grand old Republican party, and I want to say to you that the future of our party was never more propitious or gave promise of greater success in all our history than it does today. When the idea of next November arrive and the result of the presidential election is flashed over the country we will have a guarantee of four more years of Republican rule and prosperous times.

A Test For Mr. Bryan.

Bryan declares that he would do anything for party success. We have heard politicians even here in Massachusetts make pressure like that. Would he would take the second place on the ticket?—Haverhill Gazette (Rep.).

History speaks loudly against Democratic tariff reform. It's the worst tariff to business this country ever faced.—New Haven Leader.

Headache and Cold Feet.

Often it is found that a chronic sufferer from headache also complains of cold feet. This shows bad circulation and it should be strengthened. A simple and helpful remedy is to bathe the feet in cold water night and morning and rub briskly with a flesh brush or Turkish towel.

Good Rule to Observe.

In this "stitching," wear a smile and keep your own secrets.

STAND FOR PROGRESS.

Why the Republicans Should Be Successful In 1908.

Hon. Andrew L. Harris, governor of Ohio:

The Republican party should again be successful in 1908 so as to insure the continuation of the policies of McKinley and Roosevelt. The advancement of the country during the past twelve years has been phenomenal in progressive citizenship as well as in material interests. Outside of political or personal preference or sufficient reason whatever can be given for a change. If there are financial effects, the Republican party is the one that has always led them to relief. If the tariff is to be revised it should be revised by the friends of protection and not by the enemies of it. If there is to be perpetuated a systematic and fair regulation of interstate commerce of the trusts and of any combined interests, the Republican party has shown its ability for the work. If the Panama canal is to be pushed to successful operation, those who have it so well under way can best complete it. If "our islands" are to have the improvement and civilization that were promised them, the party that has so far established the policy of expansion should continue that good work.

The in an era of reforms, and the Republican party has been more than abreast with the most advanced thought of the times. There are no scandals in the public service anywhere that have not been exposed. The guilty have been invariably punished. It was formerly a campaign cry of "turning the rascals out." Recent administrations have turned them out wherever they were found without waiting for the changes of election. It is a time to keep the rascals out—not only out of the public service, but also out of other places of trust, if they disregard the laws and rights of their fellow men.

The Republican party always was a positive one and the Democratic party a negative one. The Democratic party is now more negative than ever. It is only an echo of Bryan. All the old nostrums of Jeffersonian and Jacksonian doctrines have gone to the ball.

The political, commercial, social, industrial and all other interests of the people at this time would be best served by the election of a Republican congress as well as a Republican president. There is every reason for and no substantial reason against that proposition.

LINCOLN'S FIRST SPEECH.

Firmly Believed In the Benefits of a High Protective Tariff.

In 1832 Abraham Lincoln was a candidate for the Illinois legislature. His opponent was Peter Cartwright, the famous pioneer Methodist preacher.

In that campaign Lincoln made his first political speech. It was delivered from a wagon in the street of the village of Pappsville, in Sangamon county. The speech was very short; but, like all of Lincoln's speeches, it was clear and strong.

This is what Lincoln said:

"Gentlemen and fellow citizens, I presume you all know who I am. I am Abraham Lincoln. I have been selected by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My position is short and sweet. I am in favor of a national bank. I am in favor of the internal improvement system and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and my political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful; if not, it will be all the same."

Lincoln was defeated. Referring in his autobiography to this campaign, Lincoln said: "I ran for the legislature the same year (1832) and was beaten—the only time I have ever been beaten by the people."

But Lincoln's experience proved that the "sober second sense" of the people can be trusted. In the following four campaigns he was elected to the legislature, after which he declined to be a candidate any longer. In 1840 Lincoln was elected to congress, defeating his old opponent, Peter Cartwright—Bitvolga (Ohio) Sentinel.

Tariff Legislation.

I believe, furthermore, with the chairman of the committee on ways and means (Mr. Payne) that we need a maximum and minimum tariff in order to meet the conditions created by foreign nations which have such systems. The maximum tariff must be protective. The maximum tariff will be in excess of that. The two will be so adjusted as to compel our entrance into foreign markets on an favorable terms as are given any other nation.

There will be no event be any tariff commissions. The man who made the constitution intrusted to the representatives of the people, elected every two years, the exclusive prerogative of initiating revenue measures. During all our history the home of representatives has jealously guarded that prerogative, never surrendered it and, both Democratic and Republican representatives in this respect standing on a common platform, never will.

What would happen to the tariff if a Democratic house of representatives should be elected God only knows. Past experience of Democratic legislation on the subject of tariff does not afford us much hope.—Congressman Dalzell.

Shoulder to Shoulder.

There is one thing very evident in the republican party for president. Chicago in spite of the vigorous control of the leaders of the friends of the various candidates—whoever wins will go to the heartiest support of the defeated candidates. There will be no dissension in the Republican ranks after the adjournment of the Chicago convention.

Philanthropy.

"No," said the bishop, a wise and broad man who had seen much and suffered much, "I make it a rule to perform marriage ceremonies free. I have no desire to profit by other people's mistakes."—Puck.

The Hyacinth.

For more than a century, from 1559 to 1690, the tulip land an undisputed return till a rival appeared in the shape of a double hyacinth. Ten acre of the hyacinth, or "jacinthe." It is "of divers sorts, and many of them of small esteem." Some double, variables were, however, known at that time, three being mentioned by Dodin, but the double kind from which modern ones have been derived was raised at the end of the seventeenth century by Peter Voerhelm, a celebrated Dutch florist. The hyacinth was never quite such a rage as the tulip, though during the height of its popularity great prices were paid for bulbs in Holland. It is said as much as 2,000 florins, or about $1000, was given for one root by some enthusiastic Dutch collector.

Ancient Wisdom.

It hath been said that "wise men say nothing in dangerous times," and that "in the mouth of an English lady, with provision, remarked that "unless it be when the mouth could not be spared and consider because it is attended with an egg, but then, lastly, it is a nut which, unless you choose with judgment, may cost you a tooth pay you with nothing but a worm."

Not a Masterpiece.

Gaylon married. His bachelor friends evinced him. One, less timid than the rest, blurted out: "Tell us all about the bride. Is she a beauty?" Gaylon replied: "All I can say is that she is one of God's creations, and she is not His masterpiece."

THIS CEMENT WALL A NOVELTY.

Action of Nature Has Given It a Distinct Artistic Value.

There is a wall of cement in Los Angeles which shows up one side of a building so that the artistic value never intended by the builder.

He had moved the back of current to the ground to be ready for work and was then called away on some other job for a day or two. In the meantime one of the very infrequent rains came and the water ran down into some under the action of the water was the form of the rocks between which the cement in the crevices and that is now exposed to view.

Consequently each rock was wrought into the wall as if it had been a fixed part of the plan of wall design wall.

They were then cemented and bonded together with the wall, and when after a time the weather dripped on the gauzy coating, lo—of the blocks marked with the impress of the weave. The result is a highly ornamental cement wall, resembling an iron fence. Dated Jean Nicolet.

WORLD'S TRIBUTE TO MOTHERS.

Proverbs of Many Nations Show Love and Veneration.

At a mothers' meeting a young woman recounted with some pride a number of proverbs about mothers.

"It is easier for a poor mother to keep seven children than for seven children to keep a mother." That and "God cannot be everywhere, and so he made a mother."

"A mother's love is now every day." "He who will not mind his mother will cross day have to mind the jailer." "Better lose a rich father than a poor mother." "A father's love is only knee-deep, but a mother's reaches to the heart." Those splendid proverbs are all German.

"The Hindoos say poetically, 'Mother earth, mother, mother, I do not know every mine, whether I do rich or poor.'

"The Venetians say, 'Mother! He who has one calls his heart, he who has none listens her.'

"The Lithuanians say, 'A mother's hand is soft even when it strikes.'

"The Lithuanians say, 'Mother means mary, c.'"

An Ideal of Duty.

To lose faith in men, not to humanity; to see justice go down and not believe in the triumph of injustice; for every wrong that you weakly deal another or another weak you to love more and more the fairness and beauty of what is right; and so to turn with increasing force from the imperfection that is to an all to the perfection that is above us all—the perfection that is God.—James Lane Allen, "The Code Invisible."

Nation of Pie Eaters.

We are a nation of pie eaters. The pie is a national institution, almost a part of the national constitution. The great American pie kit grows wider every year. In Havre and Marseilles France, one sees the ancient pointed phrase: "Pie Americaine," and on the outer tin jout of the Seine, just under the shadow of the Sphinx, the homely entry: "Pie de Pompeii a la New York."

On Lending Books.

"Why is it I wonder," mused the woman philosopher, "that people always want to tell you all about the person a borrowed book within any period shorter than a year? Why rather lend money than a book, for there is some chance of getting that back, but you might as well give a book to the average person as to go through the form of lending it."

Boiling Water.

Water that has once been boiled, or that has stood any length of time in the bottle, cannot be in the best state for quickly its freshly drawn cold water, if this fact were fully appreciated, it would mean very much to home keepers as an argument against using water that has stood over night than numerous families on the unhealthy use of stale water.

Nothing Out of Nothing.

Nothing can come out of nothing, and more than a thing can go back to nothing.—Marcus Aurelius.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Cardinal Logue of Ireland.

Cardinal Michael Logue, who came to this country to attend the centennial celebration of the Catholic University of America, is archbishop of Armagh and primate of all Ireland. As the highest prelate of the Roman Catholic church in the Emerald Isle Cardinal Logue exercises a wide influence. He does not mix in politics but has no objection to the politics mixed into psychology in political affairs so long as they support the Nationalists. Some the cardinal takes no part in furthering the Nationalist aspirations, this is due solely to his belief that he has time only for ecclesiastical matters. He has no sympathy for Clan-na-Gaelism.

Cardinal Logue is the one hundred and eighth successor of St. Patrick, who founded the diocese in the year 445 A. D. The diocese is the most important in all Ireland, and its cathedral, the church of St. Patrick, is known as the National cathedral, be cause it contains the tomb of Patrick, erected to the primacy in 1887. He received the red hat in 1885 and was the first primate to be raised to be an initiate to the sacred college. He was born in Donegal in 1840, ordained priest in 1866 and consecrated bishop in 1879.

Why Cushman is Sad.

Congressman F. W. Cushman of the state of Washington has been quiet as a mouse this session, and when asked why he replied: "In a speech made two years ago I said that during the one democratic administration times were so hard out my way that I couldn't get anything to eat but corn meal that he fore the financial and business depression were over I had eaten so many of them that my stomach raw and fell like the Ides. I am not going to eat any speech, funny or otherwise, this year. I'm afraid if I do some Democrat will get up and remind me of that speech." "Well, what if he should?" "Why, I would be sad and sorry," responded Mr. Cushman bitterly as he thought of his ripe lot in life, "for though this is a Republican administration, about 6,000 unemployed out in my district are living on clams now. That's why."

A Distinguished Scientist.

Dr. Robert Koch of Berlin, the discoverer of the tubercle bacillus, is now on our shores, is on his way to Japan, seeking rest and recreation. Two years spent in Africa in investigation of sleeping sickness reduced the scientist to such a condition that a cessation of work became imperative. Dr. Koch's great service to humanity was the discovery of the tubercle bacillus, the germ of consumption. In every large city in the world the death rate from tuberculosis has been reduced from 20 to 50 per cent since this discovery was made some twenty years ago.

Dr. Koch is gray now, and his size no longer has the springy of youth. He has spent his life in searching for cures for consumption, cholera and other ills that are grave dangers to mankind. He has spent much of his time in foreign lands on the scene of epidemics.

He was born in Clausthal, Hanover, on Dec. 11, 1843. He studied medicine in 1866 to 1868 and was graduated from the University of Gottingen in 1866.

In recognition of his services as a bacteriologist, Dr. Koch has received many honors.

Taxed.

The schoolboy who is taxed top the beardless youth manages his taxed horse with a taxed bridle on a taxed road; and the dying Englishman, pouring his medicine, which has paid seven per cent., into a spoon that had paid 15 per cent., flings himself back upon his taxed bed, which has paid 22 per cent., and expires in the arms of an apothecary who has paid a license of a hundred pounds for the privilege of putting him to death.—Sydney Smith.

FOR THE CHILDREN

Gold in California.

Gold was discovered in California on Jan. 19, 1848, and it was by accident, as most things of that kind are. One John W. Marshall was building a mill for himself and water on the south fork of the American river Sutter's mill, miles east of Sutter's Fort. It was intended that the mill should supply the ranches and the settlements with plus lumber. On the morning of Jan. 19 Marshall picked up from the race of the mill a small piece of yellow metal weighing about seventeen grains. It was heavier than silver, was malleable and to every respect resembled gold. The men said it was not gold, but Marshall tested it with nitric acid and found that it was. He found pieces like it in all the surrounding gulches whenever he dug for it. The news of the discovery spread, but no report of it was published until after when Sutter's mill became the center of attraction. The name of the place was soon changed to Colomo or Coloma from a tribe of Indians living in the neighborhood, and prospectors who gathered there soon scattered in every direction. By June the discovery had extended to all the forks of the American river. This was the beginning of the rush to that region.—Chicago News.

Game of Adjectives.

"This is not the game where adjectives are thrid into phrases set in the text where they occur, but quite a different game.

You will need a book of some kind, necessary notes. Write on one side of slips of paper as there will be papers the numbers from 1 to 20 or 30, as the case may be. Each member of the party selects one from a list or books. Some one then opens the book at random, and the players take turns in reading aloud until some adjective is reached. The person holding slip No. 1 gives a stroke for the number of the reading and will now use adjective and punctuation the adjective just read. The reading goes on, and when the player holding the second slip holding the second slip reaches the adjective the third to the third adjective, and so on.

It will be found either difficult to represent the adjectives successfully, and the efforts to do so will prove very laughable to the bystanders.

A Boy and a Ham.

In Idaho a boy named Willie Davis was sent to shoot a ham for supper. Willie from home to buy a smoked ham. He went on horseback and reached the ham all right, but he had to shoot it on his return when it began to snow. When he had completed half the journey the horse fell into a ravine and was badly injured, and as the smoked ham like way on foot and feared to freeze to death, the lad dug his way into a snow bank.

As the snow continued to fall for the next two days Willie was forced to spend six feet of it and was kept going and warm. The only thing he had to eat was the ham, and he chewed away at that until he now declares that he never wants to see another if he lives to be a hundred years old. He was finally lost on the fourth day and was glad enough to get a change of diet.

Miniature Marvels.

Almost any commonplace object magnified under a powerful lens will reveal astonishing and unexpected form, structure and life. For instance:

Insects of various kinds may be seen in the entrifice of a grain of sand.

Butterflies are fairy feathered.

Hairs are tubes filled with pith and surmounted by a cone filled with dust. The surface of the human body is covered with scales like a fish. A single grain of sand would cover 250 of these scales, and yet a scale covers about 600 pores. Through these narrow openings the perspiration forces itself. Life water through a sieve.

Week drops of stagnant water contains a world of creatures swimming with as much freedom as whales in the sea.—Circle.

Still Pond.

This is a kind of blind man's bluff in which the people do not see, always but keep each in one place without making the slightest motion.

The blind man gives them time to take what position each wishes and then cries "Still pond!" after which no one but himself may move or make a sound. The players generally prefer to hide under tables or behind chairs or doors, but one may often stand still in the middle of the room without being found. The rules are the same as for the usual game of blind man's buff.

Conundrums.

When is a man covered by debts? When owing for his hat.

What is that which always walks with its head downward? A nail in a shoe.

Why is dancing like new milk? Because it sweetens the calves.

Not Surely Was Cracked.

Grimes was at his club and had talked politics for an hour and a half. "That's the situation in a nutshell, concluded at the close. "Heaven!" exclaimed a member to his nearest neighbor. "What's a nut."—Strayhorn Stories.

If It's Neuralgia

and those sharp, shooting, agonizing pains that drive you almost crazy, take Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills, and get relief. They drive out the pain by their soothing effect upon the nerves. When taken as directed they are harmless, and leave no bad after-effects. That's the reason they are so popular with all who use them. Your druggist can tell you what others in your locality think of them.

"I do positively think that Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills are the best medicine ever put out. Nothing else touches my case. I have suffered from neuralgia and headache with terrible agony for years. I can't take those tablets, and they always upset my stomach. Your pills are wonderfully good, for I have found no other that I can take without upsetting me. But I can take three tablets, and they always relieve me. No one can realize what I have suffered and for fear I may be unable to get your pills when I need them I have laid in a supply that will last me a long time. Just now I am in the country where I can't get your pills. I am 74 years old and have been a sufferer from neuralgia for 50 years."—MRS. W. H. BURKETT, Macon, Ga.

The Difference.

A great sale corn and grows fruits. A house can corn and grow hair. A cook cuts corn and grows tar. A cow cuts corn and grows milk. A long cuts corn and grows fat. A plough cuts corn and grows wind. A mower cuts corn and grows tired at it, and that's all he does grow.

Give Them Titles?

By granting titles of nobility to American men we might stop the flow of good American money into the coffers of titled foreigners who marry American girls, but the remedy would be worse than the disease.

Marriage Failures.

The real reason why so many marriages are unsuccessful is that so few husbands marry the right wives and vice versa. They marry from propriety, for money, for position, for some evanescent emotion which they mistake for true Christian passion," for anything in fact, but for love in its real sense.—The Circle.

Demonstrated by Experience.

"Experience has fully demonstrated," says the Atlanta Ruler, in the Kansas City Star, "that an American heiress who marries a foreign nobleman due to his title has about the same chance to win happiness that a man has when he hooks up with old John Barleycorn."

INSANE MAN BATTLES POLICE.

Dr. Pospichel of Pension Bureau Commits Suicide.

After holding the police at bay for six hours Dr. Joseph Pospichel, an employe of the pension office, killed himself in Washington while insane. Labouring under the delusion that an attempt was being made to murder him, he fired at pedestrians and into the houses of his neighbors, held off the police at bay, firing 100 shots. Before a strong force of Pinkerton men could reach Dr. Pospichel through the second story window he poured a volley of revolver shots into his wife, mortally wounding her. Then he fired two more shots at his own head and fell dead. Mrs. Pospichel was sitting in the second story window of her home when her husband fired his first shot. She was hit in the left side. Her husband then turned his revolver on the crowd below and began firing rapidly. The man who forced the dismissal of Dr. Pospichel from the pension office, Commissioner of Pensions Ware, was among the persons in the crowd. Commissioner Ware and his family had been friends of the dead man. Dr. Pospichel was sitting in the second story window of his home when he first fired at the police. Dr. Pospichel's wife remained with him until her death. Her husband had barricaded himself in the house and had fired at the police at bay, firing 100 shots. Osborn for Regent.

The upper peninsula is booming Hon. Chase S. Osborn, of the Soo for regent of the University, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Peter White.

Of course the SENTINEL is always for Osborn. For six years, or more, we have strenuously advocated Osborn for Governor, but it seems that his star is not this year in conjunction with the proper planet to bring about that much desired result. But Osborn will be governor of Michigan before he dies, if he does not die too quick. Politically he is too big a man to be killed off. Within our recollection, many an aspirant for that office has gone to the political potters' field unhonored and unsung, but Chase Osborn has never been an aspirant, and is not now. He does not need the governorship,—the governorship needs him. He is one of the biggest men in Michigan, but he lives above the straits, and that seems to be his misfortune. "There can be no good come out of Nazareth," seems to have been the rule governing Michigan politics. We bag their saving majorities, in November, and now and then give them lieutenant governor or regent. Some day the republicans of Michigan will discover their mistake.

Well, the republicans of the upper peninsula want Warner to appoint Osborn regent. He should not hesitate a minute, but be probably will. We do not know whether or not Osborn remembers Warner in his evening prayer, but Warner will be pretty sure to find out before he issues a commission to the big fellow at the Soo.

There is nothing too good for Osborn.

Politeness and the Clock.

When a very polite woman has occasion she never looks at the clock, if by any means her eyes must wander to that side of the room she very carefully looks above the clock, or below it, or to one side of it, but never is she guilty of the rudeness of looking at the clock itself. When a good looks at the clock and comments upon the lateness of the hour, it is the very last look at it, but she must immediately, in very polite and laughing terms, insist that the clock lies, that it is at least four hours too fast. The clock is an important factor in true politeness. Only by utterly ignoring it when there is company can a woman become a perfect lady.—Atchison Globe.

From Bad to Worse.

Wife (sacrilly)—Well, there's no use in arguing the matter. When I set my foot down that covers the entire ground.

Husband (calmly)—I wouldn't make it quite that strong, my dear, but your foot certainly does cover a good deal of ground.

Knowledge of Reality.

Nothing is so valuable as a knowledge of reality. No other Knowledge is permanently valuable without it. The extent to which the human mind is capable of describing itself with knowledge of phenomena, the better to avoid the temporary discomfort of recognizing the utter truths of progress, is only less remarkable than the extent of the power it is capable of exerting when once inspired by the consciousness that it has become the vehicle of some truth necessary for the world's advancement.—William Vincent Byars, "An American Congress."

THE 4TH AT CHARLEVOIX

Systematic work is being done that presages a great day in Charlevoix July 4th.

The various committees are at work on details, and we think we are safe in predicting that the observance of the day will be fully up to the record.

We know that Charlevoix can furnish more pleasure to the square inch on the 4th of July than any town in Northern Michigan, because we have so many natural attractions.

Our life saving crew alone, in its decembled drills, is well worth coming to see. Added to this our beautiful shaded park and streets, where neighborhood parties can rendezvous for basket dinners.

Charlevoix will welcome all with open arms.

Death of a Good Man.

In the death of J. W. Milliken in New York last week Traverse City loses not only one of its best citizens, but Northern Michigan loses one of its ardent men.

The writer of this knew Mr. Milliken intimately for forty years. There was not that of his being that was not manly. He was a Christian gentleman, and that title tells the whole story.

TAFT AND SHERMAN.

These Are the Men Who Will Lead the Republican Hosts to Victory in November.

The republican national convention at Chicago last week did its work well when it placed in nomination that splendid jurist and statesman Wm. H. Taft. Mr. Taft is a big man, not only in physique, but in all the attainments requisite to success as chief executive. He is probably more familiar with American insular affairs than any other living man.

His public career is an open book, and not a page is blemished. Added to his own merits as a candidate is the fact that President Roosevelt cordially endorses him as the proper man to carry forward the work that has been commenced in the interest of the people. This fact alone is a "shield and buckler" for Mr. Taft.

James Schoolcraft Sherman, the republican nominee for the vice presidency is a native of New York state, having been borne in Herkimer county, fifty-three years ago. His present home, which has been so for many years, is Utica, N. Y., of which city he has been mayor.

Mr. Sherman is president of a large trust company in his city, also president of a large canning company.

Mr. Sherman has been a delegate to many of the republican national conventions, and with the exception of one term, has been continuously in congress for twenty-two years, representing the twenty-seventh district. He has for a number of years been chairman of the republican national congressional committee, and so far as heard there has never any stigma of graft attached to him.

Grover Cleveland Dead.

Former president Grover Cleveland died at his home in Princeton, N. J., at eight o'clock yesterday morning of chronic stomach and intestinal trouble. Mrs. Cleveland was at his bedside at the hour of his death.

Hon. Judson Harmon, who was President Cleveland's attorney general, was at his Charlevoix cottage when advised by telegraph of the death of his former chief. Mr. Harmon left at once for Princeton to attend the funeral.

History will record Mr. Cleveland as an executive of great ability, conscientious and patriotic and as one who displayed strong qualities when strength and firmness were required.

The American people, regardless of party will sincerely regret the death of Mr. Cleveland.

A Race With Death.

A Manistee special says: Plowing across Lake Michigan with engineers and firemen straining to get every ounce of speed out of the machinery, the salt steamer Edward Buckley ran and won a race with death this morning. Lying in the captain's quarters was Chief Engineer Ernest Smith of Manistee, dying. Friday afternoon while the boat was discharging cargo at Benton Harbor a heavy barrel of salt fell on the engineer and doctors there said he would probably die.

"If I must die, let me die at home," pleaded the injured man and the captain immediately cleared for Manistee, determined to get Smith to his family before the end.

Saturday morning the Buckley tied up at the Manistee and there was still life in Engineer Smith. While Manistee physicians worked over him he said what will be his farewell words to his friends.

The Proud Maid.

Robert Ingersoll, the English novelist, was overheard at dinner by a North Woodward avenue family. The men adjourned to the smoking room and the hostess lingered to give orders to the servants.

"Oh" said the young girl, "I was so proud to have been able to wait on Mr. Ingersoll. He is the first famous man I have ever attended."

And then to a burst of maidenly enthusiasm, she exclaimed:

"I believe some day I may be called to wait on Shakespeare."—Detroit Free Press.

Saturday evening of this week is the date of the opening of the Lafalot Electric Theatre.

TRY TO KILL LIQUOR FOR.

Men Who Sold Intoxicants to Indians Accused of Plot to Murder.

Miss Clara Tree, superintendent of the Indian reservation in San Bernardino county, Cal., she has caused the arrest of a number of men and women charged with the illicit sale of liquor to the Indians, or suspected to have it, and aided by half a dozen men, who are believed to have suffered in her raids. Some men are in custody in connection with the affair. It is said that Miss Tree, after learning that a jug had been laid in lore for one of San Bernardino and another for Riverside, sent Deputy Sheriff Phillips and a deputy sheriff. Miss Tree had enlisted the aid of several officers, who surrounded the unknown party before the women appeared in a buggy. The men in ambush attacked the buggy but were driven back by a volley from revolvers in the hands of the women. The officers drove up to the scene and captured the entire band.

SEW UP WOMAN'S HEART.

Surgeons Take Two Stitches and Patient Has Chance to Recover.

The surgeons at the Bloomsbury Hospital in New York performed the delicate operation of sewing up a human heart that had been cut open by a jagged knife blade. The victim, a woman, is said to have a chance to recover. The stitches, two in number, were taken in the heart of Bridget Ryan, a negress, who had been stabbed by an other woman, rival, in a dance hall. The two in the heart and one in the back flap of the thoracic sac found to have entered the heart, cutting a gash an inch long in that organ. The surgeons sewed away the exterior tissues and stitched up the cut.

STORM SWEEPS BIG ARMY CAMP.

Wind and Rain Do Great Damage at Fine Plains, N. Y.

Fine Plains, the cantonment in camp of the federal soldiers and national guards men, near Watertown, N. Y., was torn up from one end to the other of its seven miles of territory. THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION

Shortly after noon Tuesday chairman Harry S. New of the national committee swung the official gavel, and the fourteenth Republican national convention was in session. All had been notified for the morning doing of the convention pians, and when the crowds got into the Coliseum nothing was wanting in the way of arrangements. Bishop Muldoon offered the prayer opening the convention, and then Senator Balme (Michigan) of Michigan was elected temporary chairman of the convention.

In the crowded human hive which had been made of the Coliseum, the fall of National Chairman Harry New's gavel was greeted with a roar which drowned all further efforts of the chairman for several minutes. Every seat in the floor and galleries was occupied, while on the stand occupied by the chairman were men whose names are among the greatest which a great party possesses. Many of the delegates had been in their seats for an hour or more and three-man accordingly. Little delay in the opening.

From the time the gathering was called to order until Senator Harmon ascended the platform to deliver his speech, the interest and attention of the 12,000 persons in the hall seldom flagged. Parts of the Michigan senator's address were wildly cheered, particularly two sentences of Theodore Roosevelt, and twice an his declaration that the administration should not issue decrees granted the "methods" declaration that any tariff revision would not put an end to the trust of any American industry.

Uproarious applause broke loose among the Southern delegations, when the hand played "Dixie." This, coupled with the fact that filled the big hall as it gradually began to look like a Republican convention, with the applause by the hand struck up "Columbia," the Bulgarian, a yellow blood on unison, waving flags and giving a mighty shout. From early in the day, when the sun

CAMPAIGNS AND CONVENTIONS

There was just enough decoration in the convention hall to beautify, without interfering with simple third and fourth rows. Fresh bands of cedar, red white and blue ruled the front of the gallories which extend round the hall. Keyed up to fever heat with real enthusiasm, the delegates and visitors settled down between the steel girders which form a cross the hall supporting the roof, and above the gallery a similar strip was draped much large. All the Republican states, on the ends of each such were groups of big flags. At either end of the hall an immense eagle, with carefree feet spread of wings, surmounted a mass of flags. The scars and stripes dominated the scene.

For those to whom the occasion was ripe a hard work and quick common action the facilities were meagerly used. Practical men planned the arrangement of assembly halls for papa's government come, dispatches, messengers and pulleys; there were rows of telephones and huge spaces set aside for the army of newspapers of the Western Union and Postal Telegraph companies. There were committee rooms, offices, reception rooms, smoking rooms and a cozy, tastefully decorated resting room for the women.

The last night before the convention was from will suppressed anxiety in all the camps. A score of conferences were held, among the cliques as well as in the Taft circle, and the presidency, the Roosevelt third term slogan, the tariff, the Roosevelt third term slogan, the battle over the platform, and a host of other points of friction in the convention, were dealt with by the leaders on the ground. Tuesday morning their conflicts represented live, and the battle of

HE WAS QUALIFIED.

The Clergyman's Visitor Finally Got What He Was After.

"In that cellar," said a theatrical manager, speaking of a stage blunder he had committed, "I made a mistake. I guess a mistake as one that was made by a friend of mine, a clergyman.

"The clergyman had advertised for a butler, and the next morning after breakfast a well dressed, clean shaven young man in black was ushered into his study.

"'Name, please?' said the clergyman.

"'Hilary Arbuthnot, sir.'

"'Age?'

"'Twenty-eight.'

"'What work have you been accustomed to?'

"'I am a lawyer, sir.'

"The clergyman started. This was odd. However, as he knew, many were called in the law, few chosen.

"'But,' he said, 'do you understand the conduct of a household?'

"'In a general way, yes,' murmured the applicant.

"'Can you carve?'

"'Yes.'

"'Wash glass and silver?'

"'I—e—think so.' The young man seemed embarrassed. He frowned and blushed. Just then the clergyman's wife entered.

"'Are you married?' was her first question.

"'That,' said the young man, 'was what I called to see your husband about, madam. I desire to know if he can make it convenient to officiate at my wedding at noon next Thursday week?'"

AN ICONOCLAST.

His Views on Visiting the Birthplaces of Great Men.

If you like you may visit the house where Longfellow was born, but I have never myself done so. It seems rather foolish to make pilgrimages to the birthplaces of distinguished men. You are certain to be disappointed. There is Shakespeare—at least, it is conjecturally his, a wretched, squalid hole of a place, which only makes you sorry for the poet, and there is the birthplace of Robert Burns, transformed into a pleasure of twenty "rollicks." What does it matter where a man was born? There is no particular merit in being born. No one who is born has any choice in the matter. He is just born because he has to be. The real thing to consider is what he does with himself after he has been born. I feel a perfectly fatuous thrill when I enter Sir Walter Scott's noble book lined study at Abbotsford and see everything just as it was when he was still alive—his leathern chair and his desk, which he wrote each morning before his guests were out of bed. But when he was born is of no earthly consequence. Shakespeare and Scott and Burns and Longfellow must all have looked alike when they were babies, rather red and given to squalling and doubtless smelling of sour milk. Nor Longfellow's birthplace I will not visit. I like to think that when he was a man he, too, walked on Congress street wearing rather gorgeous waistcoats. But to my mind Portland is not so much an object of admiration because of Longfellow as Longfellow is to be credited because he had the good luck to be born in Portland.—Bookman.

Our little boy ate soft mincemeat for breakfast the first time the other morning. "Where does these bits come from, the lake?" he asked after the first bite. "No, from the ocean," answered his father. "Gee!" said Jimmy. "I don't wonder the ocean's salty!"—Cleveland Leader.

Advertising for One Penny.

Jabez Alvord, an old and highly respected resident of Winsted, Conn., is advertising as lost a pocketbook containing a penny, and offers to pay a liberal reward for its return. The penny bears the date of 1848, and Mr. Alvord it is almost invaluable. It was given to him by his family doctor when he was a child in dresses.

For safe keeping he put it in a corner in the house, and it fell down between the partitions. When the old house was torn down two years ago Mr. Alvord found it, after it had been lost more than 65 years. Now it is lost again.

Flattery.

"That superfluous editorial of yours this morning," said the editor, "was a palpable imitation of Macaulay."

"Ah!" replied the editor, "you are in a mood for flattery."

"I did not intend to flatter you," replied the caller coly.

"Me? Ah, dear, me. I was thinking of Macaulay."

HIS ARTISTIC SOUL REVOLTED.

Young Painter Saw Period of Suffering While Earning Needed Money.

The young artist, almost on the verge of collapse, had just received an order from an elderly spinster to paint her parlors. When the terms and appointments had been fixed and the spinster was descending the richly studded stairs, a student friend of the young painter, who had overheard the deal, rushed in from the adjoining room to offer his congratulations.

"Is his artistic soul broken?" inquired his friend sitting down at his bench.

"Why, Reggie, what's up so downhearted?" he inquired, stopping short in his work at the sight of his friend's overlaunt you hangers, in order to paint a face at 1,000 francs?"

"Yes," replied Francois, sadly.

"And your need of the money so astonishing fierce, isn't it?"

And the other nodded.

"Then, my friend, you should be kicking the ceiling in your lucky strike!"

The artist now lifted his head slowly and cared piteously at his companion. "Mert," said he, "did you get a glimpse of her?"

"No."

"Then," said the other, allowing his head again to fall into his hands, "you do not know, my friend, what torture I will have to undergo from morning till night for a whole week staring that face!"—Illustrated Sunday Magazine.

ON TWENTIETH CENTURY FARM.

Bathroom for Pigs Looked Upon as a Necessity.

"And this is the pigs' bathroom," said the twentieth century farmer, as he fitted an Egyptian cigarette into a long and elegant tube and puffed a cloud of smoke.

"I have heard of hog wash, but I didn't know pigs bathed. Do they?"

The farmer airily waved an air in the London-made walking breeches.

"Yes, the modern pig bathes. Look. With upwards of 2,000 lbs. and 42 gust he tumbles once a week into a hot bath, and is thoroughly scrubbed with stiff brushes dipped in strong, soft soap. This cleanliness keeps him sweet well, and it increases his weight 20 per cent.

"All our agricultural colleges now advise the pig to bathe. My experiments they continually show that baths cause him to fatten a fifth better. The pig's bathroom is a feature of the twentieth century farm."

Commander Craven Yielded Life That Pilot Might Be Saved.

"The higher and more valuable a life the more comfy it is to my mind to the service of others. It would sometimes seem that the sacrifice were too great as in the example instanced by Mr. Hutchinson in his "Battle of Mobile Bay." Yet the very act of heroism lengthens the merit of the whole character with a dignity and worth which earths it far to influence and reverence.

"During the battle a shot from the shore struck a cask torpedo and exploded it near the Tecumseh. A hole was torn in the bottom 20 feet square, and the ram sank like a stone, turning over as it went down in eight fathoms of water. One hundred and ten men out of 120 were lost in an instant.

"Commander Craven, one of the most gallant officers of the service, was in the pilot-house with the pilot, close to the only opening in the vessel. There was only room for one man to pass. Craven felt himself grasped by the leg. It was the pilot.

"'Let me get out first, for God's sake, captain!' he cried. 'I have five little children.'

"The captain drew back.

"'Go on, sir!' he said, and he went down with the ship, while the pilot was saved.

GOOD ADVICE FOR HUSBANDS.

Written Long Ago, But in Every Way Applicable To-Day.

A clergyman took down a small volume.

"This is called," he said, "the 'Instructions of Philippa.' It is one of the very extra: ordinary writings known. It gives, among other things, advice to husbands, and that advice is as good to-day as it ever was. Listen."

And he read:

"If thou be wise, furnish thy house well.

"Nourish her dainfully.

"Look her out, for high dress is her greatest delight.

"Feed her upon sweets.

"Perfume her.

"Make her glad with praise.

"Adorn her with jewels, feathers, and the skins of beasts, as sumptuously as thy purse will suffer."

Aids to Self-Assurance.

"There are two things which I always insist on to myself," said the girl with a small income. "One is to keep my hair well brushed and be comfortably arranged; the other is to have my shoes polished and the heels in perfect shape. If my hair is all right, then I know I look nice, and if my shoes are good, then I can stand or walk with more assurance than a bran-new gown would give me if my boots were run down. It's not alone the way they look that is important, but the way they make me feel."

CHAPTER VII.

It was on the fifth day out that a fog drifting in from the Grand Banks struck up with the M. Louis, bringing the gloom down to a half speed. For forty eight hours she groaned slowly onward, her bell, in great, plaintive boom, wailed in lonely strokes of moan, her fog horn sounded a hoarse, mournful note like the cry of a hopeless prisoner, and yet

"I believe I'm going to change my course," predicted the Prince del Pino, late on the second day of darkness, half jeering at a wager that within twenty-four hours we'd sight your Sandy Hook."

He and Annette Bancroft were sitting alone in the eight feet of the after deck house, in a sun angle of the deck, well screened from a cold breeze by the bulkhead of the wireless room, and basking on everything, including the hand rail of the girl's chair, which was warm and by another rule, little slowing flogs.

"Your Highness doesn't seem to mind much unknown," she said, smiling, in answer to the prediction.

"Ah! Your Highness doesn't really mean it," he laughed, half seriously, "I mean you found out, during those two years he was with you, that the Prince is an ordinary chauffeur. Isn't it incredible to you that with all his affectation, his refinement, himself have had the instincts of a gentleman, and I, who have not, should be?"

"Yes, I suppose it is," agreed the other, "to you—perhaps if you had been a prince instead of the man and have just enough understand a little."

He had roped his remark with "Mademoiselle" and free from its gloss or scorn, his eyes glowed out with their queer dumb worshipfulness unconcealed.

"You are like him," she cried inconsistently, "so astonishingly like him at times!"

His hand roped his remark with "Mademoiselle,"

How Sawfish Uses Its Saw.

More energetic than any other fishes are the sawfish, whose snouts are prolonged into a broad blade of cartilage, which is horizontal when the fish is swimming in a normal position and has both its edges set with slightly curved teeth almost an inch apart. The end of this formidable looking weapon is blunt and compara tively soft, so that it is quite measurable of the feats popularly attributed to it of piercing whales' bellies, ships' timbers, etc. It attacks other fish by a swift lateral thrust of the saw to beath them. Then it feeds upon the soft entrailsfish are apparently the only food it can eat from the peculiar shape of its mouth. It has an enormous number of small teeth, sometimes as many as 50 rows in one individual, but they are evidently built for the rough duties required of their tooth by the gastronomic-saving members of the family.—Fish Lore.

No Excuse.

"Brushes are very common to most people, don't you think?" asked the vain young woman. "Yes," answered Miss Carcasse, "but that doesn't excuse the style on fetiss that is becoming so prevalent."

I have found it a reliable remedy for throat and lung complaints, and would no more be without a bottle than I would be without food. For nearly forty years New Mexico has stood at the head of throat and lung remedies. As a preventive of pneumonia, and healer of weak lungs it has no equal. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Appreciation of Genius.

It was a genius who said: "Only genius can recognize genius. The multitude, or generality of lookers-on, can only feel admiration, and applaud—but only the few initiated can fully appreciate the worth of a great artistic production. For it is one thing to enjoy, another to appreciate a work of art whether histrionic, pictorial musical or literary.

Household Philosophy.

Women of Gladwin's set are at close ive, as intangible, as running water, and when, with painstaking zeal, some poor deluded mortal attempts to corner the pretty, sparkling thing—lo and behold! it slips away through his fingers to ripple gayly down hill.

"No, don't break!" Gerald stood himself determinedly. "I think I see how things are, and I know—as he is being one's temper." He spoke lastly. "The Hindu's a very different man from your other amusements! This fellow's got money and position, and he's in earnest. It's just this. Things have come to a point where you've got to decide which of two ways you mean to go. You can't put on the fence any longer. Rather know the worst, eh? you know. Come! Which of us is it to be?"

"Gerald!"

Poor Gussie Waring felt all the national irritation of a conscientious coward whose hand is forced unwarrantable by a sturdy mentor.

"How absurd and unsalted for this let," she objected petulantly. "I might just as well call you to account for the time you spend with Annette. You're certain to ask when the prince and I are together and Annette—"

"Where a nice girl's—the interruption came uncompromisingly. "And you know our wishes perfectly well. Will you mind answering my question? I'm not trouble you again. Do you consider your self engaged to me?"

"No, of course not, but!" Gussie's voice rang with genuine alarm. "I don't want to lose you, Gerald. I don't want to be without you after all these years!"

"Dear laughed kindly. "I'm afraid you'll have to," he elucidated, "and the sooner I take myself on the better. You've forgot my quick temper. I'm quite forgotten." Gussie cannot lently as you forgot that five days ago I was refused to marry me. Now if you care to go in—"

As the alarm and sudden resentment came moved stiffly out of his chair. Adjusting an somewhat crushed opera hat, paced ahead into the darkness.

"Shall I find him, Gussie?" he called, because of one!" he ejaculated, with a low whistle.

He was silent for some moments, and then a low laugh gurgled out at the young lady.

"Now—I'm other," said a soft voice very rapidly. "Better all. Sorry the chauffeur has given then back thy kiln with interest." Monsieur the Englishman, that score is settled!"

CHAPTER VIII.

"Yes, it's almost over," Mrs. Waring remarked at length.

Its end was complete, but been sitting silent for some time on a secluded angle of the upper deck on the Majestic made its stately progress into New York harbor, the following morning. "Gussie's engaged to Gerald, by the way, with a wonderful emerald, by the way, and I deputed him and white sky on which the Brooklyn Bridge, and the silvery fabric of Brooklyn bridge, hung like miraculous material that a breeze of night blow away.

The dock side the steamer chair beside Mrs. Waring glanced around from his absorbed contemplation of the scene to answer to her remark.

"Always!" he repeated, in cared-for accented English. "I do not know about Gussie, who seemed to be very well."

He sat up suddenly as the man spoke. "Why should it be over?"

"Because—because—I don't know, Gussie, who stepped beside him, a very smart, brilliant, picturesque in her collar, blue-and-white ribbon.

"That depends"—Mrs. Waring looking him, with smiling mischievous "very—ting depends on your definition of it."

The other flushed a little.

"The it to which I was referring," he said gravely, "is an exceedingly delicate matter to define. I have been trying to do so for some days, and I find it difficult. It baffles me; it eludes me; it is a bewildering, elusive, impossible!"

"Why impossible?" naked Gussie, with lifted eyebrows, she and Gerald had been on friendly terms with the rings on her unscathed hands.

Involuntarily Sarto's eyes dropped to the hands, studying them intently. They were so characteristic of the woman, so perfectly made, so indolent, so luxurious, so tantalizingly with its result.

"Because it is impossible," he quoted, in a strangely tender tone.

Only a few weeks spoken and Gussie Waring would be engaged to the—the fortune employer at the story of her discarded chauffeur. He had a hour were against the woman's heart! Why not collect it now in full?

"Why not?" asked the man breathlessly, and he leaned forward.

It was while the inevitable, orthodox words were slaging themselves on his lips, which Gussie was so evidently expecting, that a hoot-hoot clicked sharply on the deck front, and suddenly, without a white expanse between the two, a long shadow fell, blotting out the sun.

"Oh, is that you, Mr. Hunt-ock?" Gussie's tones were not precisely cordial. "Have you anything new to report to us?"

"I wish I had, Mrs. Waring," owlish the detective apologetically. "That ill luck's against me now. Here we are all on the dock and no sign of our man."

Talking out a cigarette imperturbably from its cool pocket, the man to whom he was referring lit it and relied his eyes to the same dreamy brown overcoat.

"Did you indeed expect to meet Sarto on board?" he inquired, with a glance with the utmost nonchalance.

The detective hesitated a moment. "Well, Your Highness," he explained doubtfully, "I thought he would be on board. I'm trying to make this steamer, and that held me up. I'm sorry, I'm sorry, the sharpest of my wits, that sarrii slipped from my grasp. I don't dog I had a clear lead. I'm that the man ought to on the ground."

"And are you quite convinced that he escaped? Impelled the chauffeur, still in contented tact, tone and answer steady whiffs of his cigarette.

The detective looked vaguely injured.

"All I can say," he volunteered sullily, "is that he left a corner of the ship that I don't know about and not a passenger on board can be accounted for. No," he turned decisively to Mrs. Waring, "no hope are now all aboard over here. We've got our men on the lookout, you see, and no shipping can get in without. And anything that's overhauled. My colleagues don't'll lead him safely."

"I should not be at all surprised if you are right," agreed the individual in question.

He was standing up now, his hand in his pockets, watching the detective with a cool, amused expression. "And yet, by you English have it, 'it takes a thief to catch a thief.'"

He relaxed into an irreproachable smile. "I cannot tell you how much I interested in this capture of yours, Monsieur Hinstock. Just keep your eyes open, my friend—that is my advice—and, believe me, you will come across Sarto before you know it!"

A half hour later, until the obedient detectives, the rolling of trucks on deck, the composite roar of a great city, that affected as disagreeably the nerves of the returning American—Gussie Waring, leaning peacefully through the gray twilight of the custom house, found himself in the comparative passage of Hoover's street, standing with Gerald Hunt outside of Mrs. Waring's carriage door. The man had lingered effectually blocked up by the Englishman's thickset figure, Gussie's attention had been completely absorbed in listening her relieved sulker a stately good-bye.

Quick to realize the advantages of the moment, the second-cousin made his way around to the other side of the carriage, where Mrs. Waring was leaning out of her window expectantly.

"Gussie," he said, smiling down at her, "if it is to be actually a final silence, I'm glad to know. Miss Hunnewell, I have a message—what we say greenthorns—for that I am to see you again. That is the prince, I believe, and I know he is anxious to ask for your card."

He stepped short, stood, startled, over the hoof-beat that came over the girl's clear skin at his slight words.

She looked to see Gerald Hunt gone, and, searching for a card in the bag on her lap, handed it to him without an open secret.

"Does that mean," she faltered, "that Your Highness is really thinking of coming to Washington?"

Hadin Sarto wondered over her frankness agitation, and, with a sudden flash of intuition he guessed the reason of her hesitation.

"Who knows?" he returned laughingly; "I am nothing but a free fellow, and I shall follow the wind, wherever it may blow me, now there. Mrs. Waring, where I am there is no hurry, and I am in no hurry yet." and he pocketed the strip of pasteboard, conscious that Mrs. Waring's eyes were fixed on him, "Good-bye" he added with small favor.

"We're really got to be off!" she was announced briefly. "Gerald, just tell the man to go. Good-bye, Mr. Hunt-ock, holding out her hand as that individual, some hastily made, bow with pain to be "Washington for a week of getting. I'm rights before leaving for Canada. Don't forget to call on me when you come to Washington." She bent towards him, dropping her voice, "There are some things I want to ask you about."

Sarto looked at her an instant. They was a queer, indecisive look on the mouth and a very wistful look in his eyes.

"Why, you know I shall be delighted to—to—"

"Gussie! I may?" Gerald leaned "Good-bye! There is nothing going on in Washington at this season. Every one has left town your friend Count Scoundrel is in Newport now. I shall be glad to have an opportunity to offer you."

"Except the only one that unites us," he finished the other in a very low tone.

He glanced around. Hunt was shouting directions to the coachman, and at the other side of the carriage the girl was leaning out silently out of her window. Then, with a daring laugh, "I ought not to go," said Sarto and—now "but I cannot resist it for a few days!"

"Your—look then"

And he drew back as the carriage started off, his twinkling look more than his smiling mouth, and he stood on the pavement, filling her with an agonizing sense of satisfaction—and Mrs. Waring looked uneasily.

Never in the course of her successful career had she been so baffled. Now, in spite of the enforced compulsion given by a long foreign voyage, exposed to the romantic influences of the sea and every opportunity that set could desire and an opportunity, the incredible fact remained that the Prince Hadin Sarto had not asked her to marry him.

The rub with its two inmates had rolled away, and Sarto was sinking off, his eyes on the ground, mechanically retracing his steps into the quay office, when he lumped violently against a man second time. Sarto was a fine, concrete dimension—a middle-aged person, evidently a foreigner, in a light gray woolen suit, with a striped waistcoat, vivid tie, and tonsorial side dotty.

Throwing a casual glance at our friend, this man was seen rapidly to turn with an angry exclamation in French, when a sudden light flashed into his eyes and he whirled spasmodically round on his heel.

"Sarto! he cried, still in French. "Why! It is my old friend Lodovic Sarto!"

Flushing and paling by turns, the chauffeur stood still, glancing about him with wild apprehension.

Heaven be praised! Dulet had taken himself off just in time. Recovering himself, "M. le Comte Sourcelled?" he said, also in French, with a deferential bow. "This is indeed a pleasure."

"You came over with the prince, I take it," the other resumed, with a smile. "It had remarkably white, even teeth and keen gray eyes that lit up pleasantly, the effect of the well-modeled, strong jawed face lying, however, somewhat marred by a large squiffine from shaped lip and nature's kind.

"By the way, where is Sou Alizee?" Sarto glanced around, his abnormally alert mind sorting out the possibilities of the situation just as so experienced gamester looks over his hand. "Where is Sou Alizee? he asked wonderingly. "Has a moment ago he was handling some ladies out of a cab, and I saw him not any where."

"Gone!" ejaculated the other blankly, "and I came to the docks especially to meet him. What can be because of him, I can not imagine?"

The chauffeur shrugged his shoulders. "Who knows?" he said, in his characteristic way. "My orders were to meet you here, gentlemen, and I obeyed. That is all I can tell you."

There was a moment's pause while Sarto regarded second to be considering the situation.

"Well!" he said at length, bulling a cigar, "there is nothing to do but wait for us I can see, and to return. Come, sang friend, I will give you a lift to your hotel. It is in my own direction. Hinstock!" he jerked into the man with a word in the drive. Sarto following. "Barnes takes those steamship companies. Here have I been in the world as on the whole sympathetic with the Hindu's ideas of conduct.

To be a Christian is the simplest and yet one of the most far reaching things imaginable. It means only that any man or woman takes life on the terms that the one whom men call the Christ took it; that He is the type of life he did not complete his sentence, and, indeed, how could he? What would have happened if Count Scoundrel had reached there five minutes earlier?

For a moment, as the latter settled himself on the cushions and the cab rolled off, Sarto fell to wondering over the Count's—recalling how in the disguise which had so successfully taken in his late employers, and yet—what could be more natural? They remembered him as the mustached and bandaged chauffeur, disfigured by a thoroughly rousing accident, and he had been clean shaven during that tour in the Tyrol when he was thrown with Scoundrel.

"Well, my friend Sarto," the latter resumed good-humoredly, after a short pause occupied in lighting a cigar, "how has the world gone with thee since we last met?—well, judging by thine opulent appearance. Ma Foi! With that Parisian overcoat and cigarette for one would a prince for the place himself. Ah!" he chuckled and blew great rings of smoke into the air, "that thou forgotten so little measurable at St. Moritz, when thou personated the prince in the Gaiety! Ma foi! I shall prove an gift in that affair we have on! Ha, ha! My little boy was so far out of his nest pleased when I told you for the owner thou lost for Lucie! Ma foi! Ma foi!"

A slight smile crept over the chauffeur's face. He was thinking of other and greater escapades since then and asking himself with decided curiosity if the count read dolly papers.

"It always has at least well of late," he ventured guardedly. "He was quite seriously ill at Liverpool and those days I thought he would have if that he is down with some malignant disease at the present moment."

"I am not surprised," resented the other, with a shrug of his shoulders, "jealously any the same things about myself. Ma foi! I have been ill myself these days but the foreign disputes. A dignitary of his rank is a target in this country where one is feted and entertained from morning to night. Ma foi! I am tired, there, a cavalier legend—one can scarcely keep one's appointments at the Embassy in the present. "Ah, ouf! I have not slept for a week, the appetite it leaves me, and nothing satisfy. Sarto, thy aide, convenient existence, my man, to be a free agent! Ma foi! I envy thee!" To night I am at Nice—only here for the day to receive a decoration. He rolled his eyes savagely, "whom, also! I have not met, but I know that he is a disagreeable person."

And he fell silent, musing over his cigar, the image of his chauffeur good out of the window and the cab pursued its tortuous way.

At last Count Scoundrel turned his keen gray eyes on the companion.

"There are two American ladies on board the Majestic," he said suddenly. "Friends of mine—a Madame Hendard Waring and her niece, Mademoiselle Gussie. Do you know them, Sarto?"

A young man, his assistant, rushes in, pale and out of breath, and exclaims to the great electrician:

"Sir, we are ruined!" "Why?" "Because there will be no more cables!"

"Well, my friend Sarto," the latter replied good-humoredly, after a short pause occupied in lighting a cigar, "how has the world gone with thee since we last met?—well, judging by thine opulent appearance. Ma Foi! With that Parisian overcoat and cigarette for one would a prince for the place himself. FLAG OF THE NATION.

By Rev. S. T. Willis.

Thou blest given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth. Psalms 60:4.

On the one hundred and thirty-fifth anniversary of our national existence, the thoughts of patriots are suggested by our text, namely, that our national banner, like Israel's of old, is a God-given banner to men that fear Him, and that it is to be displayed because of the truth for which it a stands.

No student of the philosophy of history will fail to see in our country the discovery and consolidation of North America was directed by the guiding hand of Divine Providence, neither will he use dispute that the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States were the actions of men who stood in conscious fear of God. Each of the original thirteen colonies was established on distinctive and democratic principles, giving to each of them sought to know the will of God, and to do it. In all their discussions and the proclamation of principles in their resolves for independence our Fathers made their appeal to God, for the truth was written in their hearts. They looked to Him as their leader and lawgiver. While they were fearless regardless of God as its author, so that they were willing to pledge their lives given honor to those who feared Him and did all in their power to make His will prevail among men.

When George Washington, Robert Morris and John Hancock were appointed to Congress a standard for the Continental troops was left to Congress, and it was decided that it should be made upon the ground of truth in its principles, and that it should be a standard for the fundamental principles our national honor has been displayed in our past.

In the first place, it is the banner of liberty. Thus the Union of the world national compact, the union of effort to free those States and defend them, the union of hearts loyal and true; and this idea of national union and unanimity of our banner is expressed in the field of blue on which shine the stars of the several States. To destroy this union would be to reverse the progress of our history and make void the principles and sacrifice of our fathers.

In the second place, it is the banner of liberty. Those States were united in the cause of freedom. The struggle of their common enemy forced them to unite their efforts in the struggle for common liberty. The recognized liberty was one of the inalienable rights to be bestowed by the Creator, and in the cause of their liberty and in the liberty of their posterity they have pledged their lives, their liberties and their sacred honor. Thus it is the flag of liberty.

In the third place, it is also the banner of bravery. Never in the history of the world did more heroic men place themselves upon the altar of patriotism because they feared God and reverenced the rights of their posterity more than their willing to sacrifice life itself. As we look upon the banner to-day we see the result of the struggle, the preserve of brave and patriotic men. It recalls the heroic struggles of the revolution. The red signifies it is the banner of the brave.

In the last place, it is the banner of peaceful possession. Wherever it floats, it shows a peaceful possession. Yet it stands for national ownership—not of any party, large or small, but the ownership of the people, and as such it is the pledge of peace. For back of the flag stand the people, and back of the people is God, whose truth is displayed in its signs and symbols.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

By Henry F. Cope.

"Whosoever does not bear his cross and come after Me cannot be My disciple." Luke 14:27.

A Christian is a disciple of Jesus Christ. Yet there are many who are called Christians who are not the disciples of the lowly publican of Nazareth, and there are many who are truly His disciples who are not known as Christians.

It may be that there are those who are Christians and not disciples, but it is certain that there are those who are disciples who are not Christians. The standard of the founder of Christianity, who nevertheless comfort themselves with the delusion that they belong to His followers.

Organizations, churches, and sects do not make Christianity; they are only the instruments for its work, the vehicles for its expression. One might have his name embossed in the largest possible letters on the efficiency or the plain membership of the church, and still be altogether a stranger to Christianity.

There are many who to prove by arguments the sublime and perfectly exact of the historic accuracy of the various statements of the Bible, and who are usually proving more for Him than be claimed for Himself, who yet are utter strangers to Christ. They are entirely defending His reputation, by silence, by their entirely unexpressive character.

These are those who, while with their lips they invite man to become the disciples of the Great Teacher, with all their powers are spending barriers and creating difficulties. They say you cannot be a Christian unless you will go with them into endless or unless you will bring yourself to accept these and the other notions.

The most striking evidence of the value and vitality of the titles and Christ Jesus lies in the fact that, despite the mistakes and in which His followers have endeavored to make discipleship an intricate and difficult affair of intellectual propositions, and of organizations, Christianity still stands in the world as on the whole sympathetic with the Hindu's ideas of conduct and conduct.

To be a Christian is the simplest and yet one of the most far reaching things imaginable. It means only that any man or woman takes life on the terms that the one whom men call the Christ took it; that He is the type of life he did not complete his sentence, and, indeed, how could he? The Sunday School Lesson

Temperance lesson—Eph. 5:5-21.

In considering what ought to be our attitude toward intoxicants we naturally turn to the Bible for guidance. But in doing so we must remember that we are to adhere, in find the spirit of its teaching, and not merely to pick out texts and speaking of wine. There are many who take the ground that the use of wine in the Bible to prohibit the use of liquor in moderation. And on this point quote texts which seem to imply that moderate use of wine is not sinful. There are also quite texts which seem to imply that moderate use of opinion, but that does not strike most men as a correct one. Right for myself is individual. And all young people should study the matter for themselves in the light of the Bible teachings, so that they may be able to resist temptation, to the temptations and arguments from others, and to be able to give straight counsel.

Now, in deciding in our own minds what is the Bible teaching concerning the matter, we must take into account the differences between the conditions in the Bible lands and those prevailed in Palestine in Bible times. Among the Jews wine was a drink of ordinary use, and was often drunk probably, more or less, by men, women, and children, and while their wine was often strong and intoxicating, it was given to strong drink to those who were thirsty in sufficiently, so that it was a common thing to see people in a state of staggering, and it was nothing like as great as that which is in evidence in our own country. And there are in common use among us, and on the other hand the conditions are so different that we cannot tell they were not in the same danger of over-indulgence. Moreover, we are not to suppose that deliberately, men would stop drinking if they wished to do so. We are dealing with the temperament of our race. Men do not stop drinking because they are forbidden. In themselves they are far from being the best of men, and the sin of strong drinks they become a terrible curse, so that the laws of most civilized countries are discovered.

Now the question is, Shall we be Christians? We should keep ourselves away from temptation, and also that we should avoid the appearance of evil. Some time ago, I was in a place where I was offered a glass of wine, and I said, "No, I don't drink." The man said, "Why, you don't think there is any harm in a little wine?" I said, "I don't know, but I know that I am not safe in the presence of wine." Yes, I know that I am not safe in the presence of wine, and I know that I am not safe in the presence of wine, and I know that I am not safe in the presence of wine, and

THE AMERICAN PRINCIPLE.

Representation in the National Grange Discussed.

The Pennsylvania Grange News says editorially that the policy of representation in lawmaking bodies by districts to the population is an American principle. In our federal government as well as in the states we have two branches of the lawmaking body, the lower house and the senate. Neither of these is complete in itself, one being a completed half of the other and both being required to act before any bill can be enacted into law. In the United States senate each state has two votes, and in the other house of congress this is equalized by giving to the states of larger population a larger number of votes. For instance, Colorado has two in the senate and three in the house, making five votes. Indiana has two in the senate and thirteen in the house, making a total of fifteen. Rhode Island has two in the senate and two in the house, making four votes, while Pennsylvania has two in the senate and thirty-two in the house, making thirty-four votes that we can give to any measure of interest or importance to the welfare of the Keystone State. New York, having still a larger population, has two in the senate and thirty-seven in the house.

So we find the system of representation in the national grange is out of accord with the American principle of representation. This American principle of representation is also carried out in our state legislatures, as counties of larger population have more members than those of smaller population and of less material interests. So in the national grange states should be given representation in proportion to their grange membership. When a state hustles and builds up a large membership and pays a big sum of money into the national grange treasury (and Pennsylvania pays between $2,000 and $3,000 to it every year) its importance to the Order should be recognized and rewarded by proportional representation. It is true that political machines are and always have been against giving the people very much voice in their own affairs, but we don't expect to find machine methods in any unit of the grange organization.

OREGON STATE GRANGE.

Some of the Resolutions Adopted at the Annual Session.

Oregon is one of the few states in which the annual session of the state grange is not held in the winter. May is the month in which Oregonians hold their annual session. This year it is held in the city of Eugene. The tax system of various states was under consideration by a committee of the state grange with a view to solving the question and was continued for another year. The grange favors the classification of the property for the purpose of taxation. They opposed the single tax. They favored state and national aid for highway improvements and also the local option law in its present form. A sum of $500 was voted to be present a defense to their direct legislation law before the United States supreme court, and $2,500 was voted for extension work. Over $70,000 worth of grange property is now owned by subordinate granges in Oregon. A resolution was adopted instructing delegates to the national grange to use their influence and vote in favor of a change from the present basis of representation in that body.

TROUBLE WITH MODERN CHILD.

Too Early Made Acquainted with the Pomp of the World.

Miss L. E. Rhoades, in her lecture on the "Timeless Child," in Milwaukee, pleaded for children to have time to be children. "I know of a Milwaukee mother who was carrying sleep to find that at a birthday party which her daughter (a child of eight) had attended two fourteen places stood at the door to receive the gifts the children brought. The same little girl who was hostess at the party, when in a formal mood, is apt to go to call upon some child of her own age in her mother's carriage, accompanied by a footman and driver, and when she arrives, presents her visiting card before seeing her friend." Miss Rhoades compared this complicated existence with that of the great John Ruskin, who had but four toys during his entire childhood, but who spent many happy hours with these, and he attributed his taste for architecture to the fact of his blocks, one of the toys having interested him in building at as early an age.

New Kindergarten Method.

Kindergarten methods of educating young children have always been a professional success. Recently a new phase of the system was invented and put into effect by a delight lady, Miss Perkins. She teaches young children by dolls, representing personages and scenes in European history, arranged in order of time, from the earliest dates. The plan works excellently.

Shrinkage of Wood.

The shrinkage of wood from loss of moisture has been found by the United States forest service to range from seven to 26 per cent of the dry volume in different species.

SOUGHT AND FOUND THEM NOT.

Few, Indeed, There Seem to Be Who Really Love Nature.

One came from another world. He went down Fleet street and saw the weary, withered souls around him. Nature and her beauties. He went to a theater and heard those who sang of her charm. He went into the country, and heard peasants grumbling of their toil and slights for the lean. He watched "sportsmen," who rent the magnificent silences with the harsh crack of rifles, and destroyed wantonly the blithest birds and beasts. Then he met a philosopher.

"I have seen those who live within doors, those who write and sing of her. Now, where are those who love her?"

As to Hogs.

A venerable Chinese laundryman, who likes to tell a tale or two, said the other day: "In China every gentleman works for a living, but not the hog. A hog work at all! Hogs do work in some parts of Ireland, and in the lowlands of Germany are beasts of burden. Abraham Lincoln used to tell about them in his younger days working in Indiana and Illinois, in the backwoods, when a chicken was to be built, or a cabin daubed, the workmen dug a big hole in the clayey ground, filled it about half full of water, sentinelled a few bandfuls of corn therein and turned loose the prime. The latter plowed in after the corn, and in a short while had converted the contents of the hole into excellent mortar.

Women Growing Younger.

No women need now regard herself as a veteran at 50. Bipeal Grange should be at their meridian. Society, so far from relegating her to the back ground, ignores the flight of years in a belle of past conquests. In the words of a concerned Lenten observer, "there has been a considerable disappearance of the middle-aged woman. The social world seems now to be made up of girls, young married women and old ladies who are great-grandmothers. Every one has bright eyes, a fine face and a slender form, and every one is dressed to perfection, the same style suiting equally well the girl of 18 and her mother."

IMMUNE TO GERMS OF TYPHUS.

Doctor's Mistake Would Have Been Serious But for Good Health.

A man in sound health need fear nothing from typhoid germs, according to evidence brought out at a London hearing of a damage claim by the proprietor of a Malvern Hydro against the local council for contaminating the establishment's authority. Dr. Thresh, one of the greatest English experts on typhoid, was a witness for the petitioner. He said, in estimate than a drop of water may contain as prophylactic against the entire world. "The swallowed millions," he remarked, cheerfully.

"How did you like these?" inquired the doctor, immediately afterwards.

"I enjoyed the pleasures of anticipation for three weeks," said the patient, "and after that I felt happy. It was so unusual, however, I was tasting water and to contain typhoid bacilli. The weather was hot, and one day I swallowed a tablespoonful of water at a gulp. Too late I discovered that it was a glass into which I had put the typhoid germs. Had my health been weak, I should have suffered. As it was, I felt no ill effects."

YALE MEN TAKE TO THE LAW.

The Bar Still Attracts One-Third of the University's Graduates.

The statisticians at Yale have drawn up a table to show what occupation the graduates of the institution have chosen in the last century. From the table it appears that the ministry has fallen off greatly as an attractive.

When the century opened about 22 per cent. of Yale graduates were ministers. Beginning with 1840 the number took a great fall. Since 1866 the average has been six per cent.

The averages for law and medicine have remained about the same. As a rule ten per cent. of Yale graduates are doctors. In law the figures have been steadily about 1 per cent.

In teaching and science the figures have increased very gradually, from about two per cent. to 11 per cent. The stronger upward tendency has been that of business. The farmers have fallen off ever since the northern country ceased to enter Yale.

Business now attracts about one-third of the men, and the law about one-third. The other third is divided between the ministry, science, teaching, forestry and a few other branches.

Queer Effect of Extreme Cold.

Some idea of the effect of extreme cold can be gained from the account given by Dr. Kane of an incident which occurred when an expedition went north in search of Franklin. The crew organized some amateur theatricals, says Dr. Kane, and the consumption was so excessive that we could barely see the performers; and extra velocity of delivery was accompanied by volumes of smoke, their hands steamed. Wigs in actual performer took off his coat he steamed like a dish of pottage."

GRANGE FIELD DAYS.

Some Hints on Speechmaking at Grange Picnics.

[Special Correspondence.]

We have very emphatic notions about the use of grange picnics and field days, for now at hand. Perhaps we should say "some grange picnics," because these occasions are just what we make them, and they are not all alike. Primarily they were intended to be social gatherings, but a little of the intellectual may well go with the social.

It is customary to have speeches on these days, but occasions but not one than is that it is decidedly better to have two or three short, spicy, interesting "talks" than to have one long, tedious "speech," however able and inspiring it may be. There can be "illustrations" in a talk or an informal address, and it doesn't need many words to impress valuable thoughts on an audience that is listening eagerly and attentively.

No speech made before a mixed audience of granges and nongranges should ever close without presenting some feature or features of grange work or public policy such as will inform those who are not members of the order as to what grange principles and policies are along the lines under discussion, and it may well close with an appeal to such farmers and farmers' wives to identify themselves with the only farmers' organization that is manifestly seeking the farmer's good and the advancement of his agricultural and home interests. A clear, wordless statement of what the grange has accomplished for the farmer in legislation may well occupy the mind for a few moments, but what the grange is doing today and proposes to do tomorrow and next day to improve conditions on the farm and to make farming more remunerative should occupy the larger portion of the address. Let us not live in the past, but in the active present. Let us not boast so much of what the grange has done as to fall of what it proposes to do—in fact, as doing—and so inspire others with the thought that they, too, should join forces with the vast army fighting the farmers' battles in the state and nation. J. W. D.

GRANITE STATE GRANGES.

Children's Day to Be Observed—State Fair Association and the Grange.

State Master Hadley of New Hampshire appointed Saturday, June 13, as Children's day, and it was generally observed throughout the state. Mr. Hadley's idea is that children should be entertained with adult speakers and participate in the exercises, particularly among the line of nature study and agricultural improvement. Thus the children will become interested in the work of the Order, and as soon as they become of the prescribed age they will be willing to become Patrons.

The Grange State Fair Association of New Hampshire will again co-operate with the Concord state fair, which will exhibit at Concord on Sept. 8-11. The income from premiums will be offered to members of the grange for individual and collective exhibits. This co-operation of the grange with agricultural societies of the state is most commendable and worthy of adoption in other states.

A Need of the Grange.

A New York correspondent justly says that he believes the chief need of the grange in this state is the organization of a corps of grange speakers whose efforts shall not be so much for gaining new members as to present grange principles and subjects to the farmers. So that City will be in sympathy with the work of the Order even if they do not join it. Such speakers should be sent only to localities where most needed and not on request of any grange. It often happens that a lecturer is called in need of a same speaker is the last one to avail for him. He says, furthermore, some kind of a bureau should be established to ascertain what kind of grange work each grange is doing book and what lines are being neglected.

The Parcels Post.

Parcels weighing eleven pounds are carried anywhere in the U. S. on one price for 12 cents by the post. Department, and at the end of the year it is $14,000,000 ahead financially. They are unmailable in the United States, and the postal department is behind several millions. The president, the grange and 70,000 granges with the same established in this country, but the express companies, a few misguided merchants and their agents in congress so far have been able to prevent it.

A Cautionary Signal.

National Master L. W. Allen in his annual address in 1874 used these words, which are as true today as they were when uttered: "There is danger that in grappling with the gigantic questions of the hour we may lose sight of the rock upon which we build. It is of prime importance, in order to sustain the national organization, that the subordinate granges are kept up to a high standard of efficiency."

Ocean Side grange of Hampton, N. H., on a recent evening took the form of a colonial party at which nearly all of the sixty-three members were in costume. The programme also took on a colonial hue.

Action of Animal Charcoal.

Why animal charcoal removes the color from colored liquids while wood charcoal has no effect has not been ascertained. A European chemist now finds that the action of the former is due to the presence of five and seven per cent. of nitrogen.

A HELP TO ALL FARMERS.

The Grange a Benefit to Nonmembers as Well as Members of the Order.

"Is the grange a benefit to farmers who are not members of the Order?"

The grange is an organization whose chief aim is to work for the improvement of conditions which will benefit its members and in so doing must be a benefit to those outside of the Order. It is a benefit themselves from the fact that the grange as a body is able to purchase various articles at cheaper rates, and this naturally creates competition in prices which benefits others. The discussion on the various topics in which farmers are interested which are brought up in the meetings help to enlighten and educate us, and in that as in all other lines of education the better informed we are the better able are we to help those with whom we come in contact, as in our intercourse with others they would reap some of the benefits thus derived.

When the grange brings its influence to bear upon the making or defeating of a law or laws which would benefit its members it cannot be otherwise than a benefit to farmers outside of the Order. As every one needs some recreation and entertainment, so the grange is a benefit to outsiders socially by furnishing some entertainments to which they are made welcome. In words, acts and deeds of all men and all nations have an influence for good or ill upon those with whom they mingle. So it cannot be with all organizations. They cannot be so exclusive that their influence will not reach beyond their own members and with that fact ever before us the grange should try to maintain a high standard of usefulness in the community where it exists. MRS. E. T. COLLINS.

PENNSYLVANIA GRANGE.

A Committee Visits Washington to Secure a Change in the Oleo Laws.

In accordance with the instructions from the last state grange a committee consisting of State Master Hill, State Lecturer Bogert and others went to Washington last month for the purpose of laying before the members of congress and department officials the desires of the Pennsylvania state grange with reference to legislation for better protection of the dairy interests. The department of agriculture at Washington was also represented by a committee. They had a spirited and interesting hearing for an hour and a half before the house committee on agriculture, after which they visited on Senators Knox and Penrose, both of whom assured the committee of their willingness and desire to do what they could to protect the interests of legitimate dairying. Later they called upon Secretary of Agriculture Wilson, Secretary of Treasury Cortelyou, Commissioner of Internal Revenue Capers and Dr. Wiley, chief chemist. From these gentlemen they secured much valuable information. One of the members of the committee exhibited to the internal revenue officials a number of samples of butter as yellow as June butter, but which had paid but one-fourth of a cent taxes. These officials alluded to the difficulties they experience in collecting the proper amount of taxes and in suppressing violations of the law. The fact was magnified that the government does not have revenue collectors stationed at the licensed oleo manufactories. This matter was also brought to the attention of the congressmen, and it is not improbable that congress will take steps to remedy this defect in the laws.

W. F. HILL.

Dancing at Grange Meetings.

A New York paper has recently called attention to that which it believed to be a fact and which was not—namely, that State Master Stetson of Maine had issued a bar against dancing in grange halls, which seemed to forbid dancing at any and all times by the members of the grange and, indeed, on every other evening in the week. Mr. Stetson's attention being called to the statement in the paper, he denied he had promulgated any such order. He said he was following the rulings of his predecessors, which allowed no dancing during the grange session. Mr. Stetson says that as Grange does not own the grange halls, and he does not claim the right to say what they shall be used for the other five nights in the week.

Country's Real Backbone.

Trade increases the wealth and glory of a country; but its real strength and stamina tend to be looked for among the cultivators of the land. In their simplicity of life is found the simplicness of virtue—the integrity and courage of freedom. These true genuine sons of the earth are invincible, and they surround and keep in the mercantile bodies, even if these bodies could be supposed disaffected to the cause of liberty.

THE JUVENILE GRANGE.

Some Reasons Why There Should Be an Organization of Young People.

[Special Correspondence.]

There is no department of grange work at the present time so important for both present and future as that of bringing in and training the young for the work of the Order.

This is an age of specialties, and among other wise and useful specialties this child culture is reaching its share. Why, then, should not the child of the grange receive proper training and the grange of the future come upon the scene of action fully equipped and trained for the work he has to do? The grange is an educator of women, home and work, and its training is entirely along different lines from those followed by the schools. There is a fitting for public life gained therein not to be found elsewhere. Many who have grown to manhood or womanhood timid and diffident have, with a few years of grange experience, acquired ability to express themselves clearly and in an interesting manner on almost all subjects. Had their training begun in early youth, what results might not have been reached.

The strongest argument in favor of the juvenile grange is that it takes the child at an age before other influences have crowded in and left no room for it. Many children who have grown up in among us and who have at an early age expressed a longing to become old enough to join the Order leave by the time that age is reached but interest, and their fresh young minds are lost to us. Since the organization of the juvenile grange here, young children of worthy parents have come to us, and without a single exception every child has joined the grange at the earliest opportunity after the age of fourteen is reached. And without one exception these children are well trained in parliamentary rules, are more than usually thoughtful and are ready to express themselves on subjects which are up for discussion. Thrift is taught by the lecturer's hour is of wonderful value. The lecturer's hour is of equal value to them, giving them, as it does, the benefit of expressing themselves in public and training them for a future of usefulness.

THE COUNTY FAIRS.

Co-operation of the Grange and Agricultural Societies Desirable.

The county agricultural societies are beginning to see the benefit of having the grange co-operate with them in their annual exhibitions. Several county agricultural societies throughout the state have been this co-operating for several years, but in other counties they have not done so. Our attention was recently called to an announcement made by the Columbia agricultural and Horticultural society of Illinois, whose fair is to be held Sept. 15-17 and which offers for the best collective exhibit of fruits, grains or vegetables by any subordinate grange of the county of Columbia a first prize of $25 and a second prize of $10; also $10 will be paid to each grange making a creditable exhibit if it does not win the first or second premium. No entrance fee is charged to exhibitors in this class. The following scale of points is to govern:

VAGRANT MAN FINDS HIMSELF.

Letter to His Own Name Exposes Predicament of Topeka Resident.

As strange as fiction is the story of the experiences of George Henry Harrison, who disappeared from Kennebunk, Me., Jan. 4, and who has been found living in S. H. Gresham on a chicken ranch of Paul H. Jackson, thirty-two miles from San Diego, on San Dieguito valley, Cal., where he has an owner poultry ranch, although he had never lived in the state nor had he a farm. As Gresham Harrison he joined a band among Harrison colonists $15.50 for wagonage and went to Harrison at Topeka which is 18 miles from the Jackson ranch, assuming her husband's letter of introduction, which was found in his clothing, with which he identified himself. Hungrily and destitute of himself. He completed and she identified him. Meantime "Gresham" was transported to San Diego by a cloth, but denied he was Harrison. Saturday Harrison arrived at Los Angeles, meeting his wife's sister, Mrs. W. H. Sears, who claimed he is not Gresham Harrison but Jane was terribly beaten by gangsters he had attempted to rob Gretchen City motorcycle for robbing a watch of all his savings. He said he was Topeka and worked in the Agricultural Department after the accident, recovering from loss and he disappeared at Kansas City.

TUESDAY.

Shortly after noon Tuesday Chairman Harry S. New of the national committee sent the official gavel, and the fourteenth Republican national convention was in session.

President Roosevelt got applause of the principal cities in their cries for big new parks and proper plans of a great regatta. The people who strummed upon and down the thoroughfares were nudges much indicated that every compassionate from forest Texas on the south to the States which border the Canadian provinces on the north, from New England on the east to the most distant of the West was represented. Hospitality not only for the inhabitants delegates but by correspondents and visitors was said.

Shortly after 12 noon it was as if a President had been opened, for crowds of people poured into the great Coliseum at every door and scrambled for their places. At the outside entrances the doorkeepers would have been swamped except for the aid of police, who insisted that everyone find their proper entrance. By 12 o'clock the floor was a black sea of humanity, while Michigan and Wisconsin avenues were crowded with overflows of people anxious to hear the shouting and witness the entrance of celebrities.

In the crowded human hive which had been made of the Coliseum, the chief of National chairman Harry New proved was provided with a roar which drowned all further efforts of the chairman for several minutes. Every seat in the floor and galleries was occupied, while the stand occupied by the chairman were near whose names are among the greatest which a great party boasts are. Many of the delegates had been in their seats for an hour or more and there was, accordingly, little delay in the opening.

Scene Is Impressive One.

It was a wonderful and impressive assemblage great body of 980 delegates gathered from every part of the union, and its remote possession, calmly settled down to carry out the order of the party they represent and nominate a candidate for the highest office in the gift of the people.

President Roosevelt got applause when Chairman New spoke first in mentioning the name had arrived to make up the business of the convention. The applause declared the country said, yes, called "twelve years of the most brilliant administration in the world."

John H. Mulloy, temporary secretary, who has a powerful voice, read the call for the convention, and then Chairman New announced that the national committee had recommended Julius C. Burrows, of Michigan, for temporary chairman. Senator Burrows was warmly received as he stepped to the front of the platform. He bowed his acknowledgments and began his "keynote" address.

From the time the gathering was called to order until Senator Burrows concluded his 12,000-word "keynote" speech, the interest and attention of the 12,000 persons in the hall seldom flagged. Parts of the Michigan senator's address were wildly cheered, particularly his mention of Theodore Roosevelt, and later on his declaration on the anti-injunction question. Still more cheers greeted the "keynote" declaration that any tariff revision "wound not and cut out the free of any American industry."

Senator Burrows spoke for an hour and eight minutes and concluded amid hearty applause. Then the band, which had been kept out of the proceedings for longer than an hour, had its innings.

Uproarious applause broke loose among the Southern delegates, when the band played "Dixie." This was followed by a shout that filled the big hall from its roof. Nobody begin to look like a national convention. When in its med-

GAVEL FROM FORT DEARBORN.

Part of Historic Log Used in Convention Auditorium.

A gavel made from an oak log of old Fort Dearborn was used to open the Republican national convention. For the manufacture of the gavel and its box one foot were cut off the end of an eight foot log in the collection of the city department of municipal history. A silver plate on the box states that it is made of hand-hewn oak log from a blockhouse of old Fort Dearborn, the first outpost of civilization under the United States government in Chicago or vicinity in the old Northwest, 1803—burned by the Indians and rebuilt in 1816.

Utah Sents a Woman.

The only women who had a seat on the floor of the Republican convention as a regular delegate is Mrs. Lucy A. Clark of Brigham City, Utah, and it is decided that she is also the only woman who ever had a seat in a Republican convention. Mrs. Clark came merely as an alternate to the Utah delegation, but when the regular delegates was absent. There

THE PLATFORM AT A GLANCE

PROSPERITY—The issue of wealth, the source of power, and the sole or chief test of statesmanship, is the prosperity of the people. We pledge a continuance of this prosperity.

ANTI-TRUSTS—The Republican party has been the party of the people in the enactment of the Sherman law and other laws for the suppression of unlawful combinations in restraint of trade. We pledge a continuance of the vigorous enforcement of the law against all such combinations.

LABOR—The same policy which has been the source of the prosperity of the people of this country has been the source of the prosperity of the wage earners. We pledge a continuance of the policy.

TARIFF—The Republican party in 1908 revised the tariff and made it the most effective protective tariff law which has been enacted by any party. We pledge a revision of the tariff to be undertaken immediately after the meeting of the extraordinary session of Congress which we pledge ourselves to call for the purpose of revising the tariff.

TARIFF—The Federal Government should have another experiment and conference with the nations of the world in order to secure lowering the barriers to remote markets.

INLAND WATERWAYS—We are for a comprehensive plan for the improvement of our inland waterways, including the Mississippi River, and great lakes.

ARMY AND NAVY—Our navy and the American people do not desire and will not permit any war of aggression or conquest. We favor such a navy as will keep us from being insulted by any other power, and such an army as will be a fit and sufficient support of our civil institutions.

PHILIPPINES—We approve the efforts of the President to establish in the Philippines a government modeled on that of the United States, and we hope that the progress made in the islands in the establishment of a government of law and order may be such as to justify the first installment of good faith given by the last Congress in the passage of the Philippine tariff bill.

NEGROES—We deplore with profound regret the fact that the negroes, who, by the law, were made citizens of the United States, have not been given the full benefits of the law.

JAPANESE—We deplore the existence of race prejudice in California and other States, and we hope that the good sense of the people of those States will prevent any legislation which may be unfriendly to the Japanese, who are our guests by treaty.

CHINESE—We deplore the fact that the Chinese exclusion laws have been so administered as to be offensive to the Chinese people, and we hope that a way may be found to remove the cause of complaint.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS—We favor the establishment of postal savings banks for the benefit of the people, and the encouragement of thrift.

CONSERVATION—We believe in the conservation of our natural resources, but we do not believe that the exercise of the power of conservation should be used to withhold the development of the West, or to permit the creation of monopolies.

ALASKA—We favor the speedy construction of the railroad in Alaska, and we believe that the government should own and operate the road.

CONSTITUTION—We believe that our system of government, ordained by the fathers and established by the Constitution, has been the source of our national greatness and glory. We believe that the Constitution of the United States, with its division of powers between the National government and the States, has been the source of our prosperity and progress, and we oppose any change in the form of government established by the Constitution.

JUDICIARY—We believe in the independence of the judiciary, and we oppose the recall of judges.

RECALL OF JUDICIAL DECISIONS—We oppose the recall of judicial decisions.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT—We cordially appreciate the services of Theodore Roosevelt to the country and the world, and we deem it fitting that the Republican party should take advantage of the first opportunity to express its gratitude for the great work done by him for the people of this country.

SHERMAN NOMINATED FOR VICE PRESIDENT

New York Congressman Wins Honor of Having Second Place on the Ticket.

ALSO CHOSEN ON FIRST BALLOT

Republican Convention, After Four Days, Completes Its Work and Adjourns.

CHICAGO correspondence.

Congressman James S. Sherman of New York was nominated for Vice President by the Republican national convention at the Friday morning session. Thursday Woodrow of New York made the nominating speech, and Timothy L. Woodruff, speaker of the New York legislature, seconded the nomination of James Sherman.

When the delegates assembled for the afternoon session, cited after the strenuous efforts of the previous day, at the Republican national convention, the Friday morning session of the day's meeting, and when chairman Lodge rapped the convention to order for the start on the fourth day's session he looked lonesome on an area about as big as a million and not a few delegates were absent.

Fourteen hundred and two-tenths of the work was a running mate to President Taft. Mr. Sherman's name was practically selected and Congressman James S.

CHICAGO.

The commercial mentality reflects in broad outlines of a prosperity statistically obvious generally lagging behind, but gains towards the middle-class of the country. The secretary said the following which the membership of the National committee, chosen by the State-delegations, was constituted. Henry C. Lodge of a New York delegate, the rules of the last Republican national convention were adopted for the conduct of the gathering. The convention then adjourned until Wednesday noon.

WEDNESDAY.

The convention was called to order at 12:20 p. m. Senator Patten, of Oregon, announced that the credential committee, of which he was chairman, would not have its report ready for an hour.

After Senator Burrows, as temporary chairman of the convention, called the delegates to order he introduced the chaplain of the day, the Rev. William O. Watson, of Chicago, who offered the usual invocation. The work of the committee arrived considerable bitter discussion during the morning session, with the result that threats of a minority report were made. Mayor Charles A. Bookwalter, of Indianapolis, was the champion of the "lilies of the valley" and was outspoken in his charge of "rank injustice" in the committee's rulings on contests, and denied the minority a fair hearing. With a chorus of "Yes" and noisy "Nays" the report of the credentials committee, seating the contested delegates in the same manner as the national committee ruled, was adopted by the convention. The committee on permanent organization next made its report, which was adopted and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, of Massachusetts, was introduced as permanent chairman. He was given a rousing greeting and at once plunged into his speech.

THURSDAY.

The convention was called to order by Chairman Henry Cabot Lodge shortly after 12 noon and opened with an invocation by Rev. John Wesley Hill, of Metropolitan Temple, New York. Senator Albert J. Beveridge of Illinois, chairman of the Committee on Resolutions, then read the report of the committee on platform, which that body had agreed upon after a long and tiring fight, in the Senator read the doctrine received upon in the Roosevelt Cabinet.

THE patrons of the Laf-a-lot Electric Theatre on Thursday evening, July 2nd, will see a grand review of America's wonderful battleships in command of "Fighting Bob Evans."

Heat the World Affords.

"It gives me unalloyed pleasure to recommend Bucklen's Arnica Salve," says J. W. Jenkins, of Chapel Hill, N. C. "I am convinced its the best salve the world affords. I proved a token on my thumb, and it never fails to heal every sore, burn or wound to which it is applied. 25c. at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

It Can't Be Beat.

The best of all tonics is experience. C. M. Harden, of Pine City, North Carolina, says: "I find Electric Bitters does all that's claimed for it. For Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles it can't be beat. I have tried it and find it a most excellent medicine." Mr. Harden is not alone in the best of all medicines also for weakness, lame back, and all run down conditions. Best too for chills and malaria. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines drug store. 50c.

A. T. Washburn has just closed a deal with A. B. Rifle, of the Cheboygan Rug Co., whereby the business and plant of that company is turned over to the Petoskey Rug Co. This business change, with the plants operated by Mr. Washburn at Cadillac, Sault Ste. Marie and Petoskey gives him control of more looms than any other company in the country.

The Laf-a-lot Electric Theater.

A splendid 4th of July program has been arranged for the Laf-a-lot Electric Theatre.

Perhaps the most entertaining feature of the program in the line of moving pictures will be the actual pictures of the Great Boxing contest between Tommy Burns and Gunner Moir in London.

There are but 5 films in existence, showing this fight, and we are indeed fortunate in securing one of there for the occasion.

In connection with this will be shown other films in colors and illustrated songs of exceptional beauty.

Misses Mabelle and Idwa Zickle Garre will return to Charlevoix for this day and give a program especially adapted for the 4th of July.

Johnny Freer will be here to delight the audience with his clever songs and dancer including Rock & Wing, Silver shower clog and Irish jig.

The program will commence at 9 o'clock a. m. and change to the afternoon and evening.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Rosette Rose, a mail clerk on the G. H. & I. fell dead of heart disease on a Grand Rapids street. Mr. Rose was a pioneer of Petoskey and is first publisher, having been the founder of the Petoskey Democrat. The body was brought to Petoskey for burial.

In Frankfort recently, Mrs. Chase of Ironton was declared sane by the examining physicians and was released. The same was the case against Francis S. Hecster of East Jordan who was discharged after examination. A man named Frank Pennypacker, who was picked up in Charlevoix seemingly in a demented condition, was held until next Monday for further examination. He has no relatives so far as the authorities know.

Boyne Citizen: There are several contractors in the city from home and abroad who are busy figuring on the new building to be erected by Mrs. May Spencer, between the Bank block and Norgath's dry good store. The plans are on exhibition at the first National bank. Mrs. Spencer and her son, Charles, of Chicago have arrived in the city and work will be commenced on the new structure within two weeks. The building will be known as the Masonic Temple, who will occupy the entire rear of the second story. The front of the second story will be divided into offices, and the first floor will contain two stores which are already rented for business purposes.

A rare treat in moving pictures can be enjoyed at the Laf-a-lot Electric Theatre tonight. A review of America's splendid navy entering San Francisco bay under command of "Fighting Bob" Evans. We can only hold these pictures for one night, so don't fail to see them.

STARTLING HORROR.

Loreno D. Porter of Norwood Township, Shoots Wife and Son and Hangs Himself.

The most terrible tragedy that ever occurred in Charlevoix county, and one of the most horrible in the annals of insane frenzy, occurred three miles south of Charlevoix at eleven o'clock july 4th.

Lorenzo D. Porter lies in a suicide's grave and his wife and son lie torn and mangled, with only an equal chance between life and death, victims of the disordered mind of the husband and father, whose record as a citizen was unblemished, and home life had never been clouded.

At the time above stated, Harry Porter aged about thirty, was sleeping face down upon a couch. Mr. Porter entered the room with a double barrelled shot gun, loaded by himself with buckshot. Without a word of warning he discharged the gun at his son, the charge taking effect in his right shoulder, mangling it frightfully but fortunately not touching any vital organ.

Mrs. Porter, hearing the shot, entered, from another room and attempted to take the gun from her husband. Being unable to accomplish her purpose she ran to the stairway, closing the stairway door after her. Mr. Porter immediately discharged the second barrel of the gun through the door. She evidently stood with her side toward the door, as the charge went through her breast from one side, but again the vital organs were untouched. The two breasts, however, were terribly mutilated, the surgeons being obliged to entirely remove the flesh of one breast. Mr. Porter then left the house.

The first discovery of the terrible deed was when passer-by heard the screams of Harry, who lay in his own blood. A telephone message was sent to this city, and undersheriff Weikel and R. A. Emrey were soon on the spot. The doctors were also summoned and the wounded mother and son cared for.

Then the search for Mr. Porter began. On entering the barn the dead body of the unfortunate man was found hanging from a rafter by a common rope cow halter. Not even a noose was made, and death came to him by slow strangulation. In his pocket was found a note directing that his body be buried at Bear Oak, his former home.

The horrible deed was the act of an insane man, as there had been no trouble whatever in the home. Mr. Porter had been in poor health for three years, and at times suffered periods of intense melancholia. Of late he had been acting strangely, his friends in Charlevoix frequently referring to his changed manner. Within the past few weeks he has laboured under the delusion that his family and stock were starving.

Mr. Porter was in comfortable circumstances. He owned the old Robert A. Miller farm just over the Norwood line and had no cause to fear for the future. He had lived there for more than twenty years, and enjoyed the confidence of all with whom he came in contact. He was considered an honorable man and good citizen.

Deceased was a veteran of the civil war both in the army and navy. He served a short time with the land forces during the earlier days of the conflict, but changed to the navy serving in the Mississippi Squadron, on the steamships, Great Western and Pittsburg, participating with the battles at Island No. 10, Vicksburg, Grand Gulf, and the Banks Red River expedition.

The doctors say that if blood poisoning or tetanus does not intervene both patients have a fair chance of recovery. Both were resting easily yesterday.

The remains of Mr. Porter were taken to Burr Oak Tuesday.

WANTED—Employment by two responsible girls, doing nurse maid's work. Apply to J. C. Compton, Charlevoix, Mich.

The Fourth at Charlevoix.

Very little fault can be found with the 4th of July outcome in Charlevoix. The day opened with generous showers, and for a time it looked dubious, but about ten o'clock the sky cleared, and the remainder of the day was all that could be desired.

We do not remember that Charlevoix ever entertained a larger holiday crowd. The streets were jammed all day, the people coming by team, rail and up-lake boats.

There were no unpleasant or disorderly happening and the celebration may be fairly voted a success.

RICHARD LEWIS, County Clerk.

Piracy on Lake Michigan.

A Muskegon special says: A Seavey, pirate of the "inland sea," expects today in a dungeon deep in the Cook county jail, state of Illinois, facing a possible sentence of 10 years in the penitentiary. Thus comes to a termination, for a time at least, the career of the only genuine skull and crossbones, cutlass and pistol lagerdator of the great lakes. Seavey is the bold buccaneer who was brought to bay by the revenue cutter Tuscarora yesterday, with a solid shot fired athward his bow—meaning the low of his fleet little, light craft, the Wanderer, aptly named.

Seavey is known all around the lower end of Lake Michigan as a whiskey pirate. A whisky pirate is a denizen of the bounding main, who hoods up, not himself, but his ship, with fire water, and peddles it here and there and anywhere among the Indians along the mainland and island shores of the lakes. This traffic is strictly illegal, for the government has decreed that the red men shall not have whisky. And, besides, "Firut" Seavey knew not the color of a liquor license card.

All went exceeding well with "Firut" Seavey and his band as long as they adhered to whisky piracy. It was when, on June 17, as charged, that, having put stealthily in at the harbor of Montague, they spied a lumber schooner unguarded that the bold buccaneer invited his fall. The Wanderer stole away, but Seavey and three of his band remained behind. Walla Capt. McCormick, of the Nellie Johnson, visited up shore, they seized the little craft, a 10-foot lumber hooker, and made off. Capt. McCormick unromantic soul, lodged a plain complaint of theft, and that sleuth hound of the lakes water deep, the Tuscarora, took up the trail. After visiting half the ports at the upper end of the lake, they got word from Frankfort that Seavey was there. Seavey got away in his own craft, the Wanderer, just as the cutter arrived, and was captured after a seven-mile chase, as stated. In the harbor at Frankfort was found the Nellie Johnson, abandoned, and minus her cargo of lumber.

The reception given in honor of Mr. Frank Dunlap at the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Donlevy last Thursday evening proved to be an enjoyable, animated affair. About thirty guests were assembled. Games and music both vocal and instrumental were mingled in until midnight, when a nice lunch was served, consisting of ice cream, cake and lemonade. After lunch the ladies presented Mr. Dunlap with a token of remembrance in the shape of a collar and cuff box made from Indian basket work of a very unique design, and also a cigar holder and ash tray. The best part of it was neither Mr. and Mrs. Donlevy nor Mr. Dunlap knew anything about the affair, and to use Mr. Dunlap's word "they were completely taken off their feet." Mr. Dunlap says that occasion will always remain a bright spot on his memory.

Boyne Journal: On Saturday last Messrs. W. H. and Thomas White left for a trip to Vaniuver, B. C. JOHN COOK, City Treasurer.

Boyne Citizen: Manager Swift accompanied by the Beulah Home quartette and the boy wonder were at Muskegon last Sunday where they were given a cooling reception in their sacred concert work and elocution. The edifice was packed to suffocation and many were turned away. It was one of the largest audiences ever assembled in that village. Mr. Swift and the boys will go to Traverse City for the evening Sunday where the large opera house has been secured for them. As the boys have visited that city before they will no doubt draw a large crowd.

"The chauffeur's eyelids flickered. 'Wearing?' he repeated. 'Why, I thought I told you—I think I have heard it before. It is also a tall, slim lady, with reddish hair.'

"Parfaitement!" The Count spread out his hands. "The little de guise!" he explained, "and of an exquisite style! Dropped 'it's value, however, when he became a second-rate thousand!"

With an effrontery he turned on his companion. "The prince—does he know them, are they countrymen-friends? Ah!" a light of inspiration leaped into his eyes. "Perhaps it is those were the ones in his whom you said he was helping into a cab—this?"

The chauffeur saw that there was no use in keeping it. "Very likely," he said calmly, inwardly cursing himself for his momentary inspiration.

The Count fell back on his instant generosity. "Then you shall have the money, instantly. Madame Waring is stay-ing," he said, bowing swiftly to an inestimable condescension, "but meanwhile you shall go to the address of the cab-man. Good! I think I know the name of the hotel—where shall I stay?"

His leaky nerve was intuitively near the chauffeur's. He knew quite accurately the other's face. "Tell me," repeated eagerly, "tell me! I am San Antonio—Sorrento's face was expressionless. "I cannot tell Your Excellency," he said hesitating, and then spoke in impatient Italian.

"Yes, yes! You can tell—you must tell. Look you. He is gentlemanly—I think with his arrival, little lady. I'm sure are the prince that very afternoon. It is a notorious fact—he where to find him, my good fellow." His tone was coaxing the extreme, and slipped a gold piece into something suggatively in his pocket.

The chauffeur's stained fingers twitched. He had been doing some rapid thinking during the last few minutes.

"One likes to be obliging," he said. "Let me see."

He squeezed in reflect a moment, and then, turning to the other with an eager-ing smile, "If M. le comte—pardon, Excellence," he said quickly, "he will be at the Club Union, this afternoon at about four o'clock. That is the best I can do."

Sorrento's pal his hand with impulsive gratitude into his pocket, and then, moved by the consciousness of his generosity, drew it forth empty.

The chauffeur smiled enigmatically. He had been doing some rapid thinking during the last few minutes.

"One likes to be obliging," he said. "Let me see."

He squeezed in reflect a moment, and then, turning to the other with an eager-ing smile, "If M. le comte—pardon, Excellence," he said quickly, "he will be at the Club Union, this afternoon at about four o'clock. That is the best I can do."

Sorrento's pal his hand with impulsive gratitude into his pocket, and then, moved by the consciousness of his generosity, drew it forth empty.

In the Metropolitan Club the big electric fans were whirling madly all day, but the very few lounges in the comparatively deserted rooms preferred to sit by the front windows looking out into shady Ti street, dozed in the lightest of summer coats.

As the day wore on the atmosphere became heavier, the sky rolled in an omnious gray mass behind the Palisades.

"Going to have a thunder storm," predicted a tall man in a white flannels who was standing by one of the club windows at about five o'clock. He was speaking to Jim Dunlap at the Country Club twilight. Just up left, he added, "I've fifty bucks on the Jersey shore."

"Pocket your pride and take a trolley car," suggested the other man, who was looking into the black clouds won't work up before midnight, anyway, if they do at all."

He put on an eyeglass. "There's another little thing about Gussie. Funny he can tell them instantly by their walk! I'd call a dozen men in the Club within ways of trotting about, but on the other side they seem to be all alike, and walk the same step by the same dancing master. See that fellow? Think he's a Frenchman or an Italian?"

"Why, if both I should say," declared the other, following his glance. "And a swell, too, from the look of him and the cut of his clothes! I suppose he's over here on some business or other." The object of their attention meanwhile was proceeding up Connecticut avenue at a leisurely, dilettante pace, stopping to glance up from time to time at the houses, apparently, but a keen observer would have noticed that he was not looking at the architecture, and that the glances were directed to the other side of the street, and slanted upward from time to time at the houses, as if he were looking for a number.

He paused to reflect a moment, and then, turning to the other with an eager smile, "If M. le comte—pardon, Excellence," he said quickly, "he will be at the Club Union, this afternoon at about four o'clock. That is the best I can do."

THE WORK IN MICHIGAN.

The Proper Supervision of Subordinate Granges a Prominent Feature.

Michigan state grange stands well in the front in the matter of careful, painstaking work to build up the Order and to make the grange influential. A plan that is awakening a new interest in the work of the Pomona grange has been evolved by State Master Horton and his conferees. In a circular letter which he has issued to Pomona granges Mr. Horton advances certain general lines of thought that should characterize the Pomona grange programme, which are as follows:

First—To mention an understanding of the absolute necessity of organization among farmers (in state as among those engaged in other professions and business pursuits).

Second—An explanation of the chief variations in an organization to meet fully meet the current requirements of farmers from that source.

Third—To forcibly present the grange as land in kind, organic formation, objects and plan of execution.

Fourth—To present the subject by record needs, which, in a general and more generalized way, this may include all of the various features and parts of education, social improvement, financial welfare, farming, housekeeping, village duties and public welfare, all as promoted by the product and sure products of the grange.

These we consider as the foundation stone upon which the work of the Order can be drawn up, and along or sentiments to be presented at Pomona grange meetings through the lecturer's programme.

This plan has awakened a new interest in many of the Pomona granges, and three or four have mined year books in which the Pomona programme for the year is given. Mr. Horton has also developed a plan of grange superintendent, and the matter before referred to may be taken as part of that work. Concerning the awarding of new names, Mr. Horton recommends two or three important plans. "Applications might may be considered two weeks ahead with a view to have each member secure as many applications as possible and present them on that night. Another plan is known as the district plan, where the territory is divided in to districts and each district vies with the others for the most applications. A strong list of speakers is provided both for the subordinate and Pomona meetings. Indeed, this speakers' bureau is becoming an essential feature in the work in Michigan. The general motto of their addresses is "The No, easily of organization and the Ideal Plan and Form of the Grange." Mr. Horton requests his county deputies to report carefully on all the work in their respective districts, in which manner he keeps in touch with the needs of nearly every grange in the state.

Grange Not Political.

It seems to be a difficult matter for some members of the grange to keep the organization separate and distinct from matters with which it should have no connection, says the Kansas Farmer Grange News. It is true that politicians are always on the alert to get indorsement for their different parties and their party candidates. In carrying out their purposes they will pull the wool over the eyes of unsuspecting subordinates of Pomona granges. They get resolutions introduced that on their face look to be harmless but are designed to boost one candidate or party at the expense of another. Grange members everywhere should persistently and consistently refuse to allow themselves to be used as catspaws to pull chestnuts from the fire for some unworthy object. The membership in our order carries but little significance if the oath and obligation of fidelity to one another are to be thoughtlessly broken. Subordinate and Pomona masters should not allow this breach of trust to be committed and should nip in the bud at once any attempts to use their granges for partisan political purposes.

Caution May Be Needed.

Is there a tendency to take into the grange those who are not worthy? With its growing popularity, the grange attracts many who are not actuated by motives in become members but who are seeking admission solely for self aggrandisement or for the social features merely, any tendency to lower the standards set by the fathers should be checked, and that promptly.

The Work in Ohio.

State Lecturer Taber informs us that the grange is on the up grade in Ohio. He considers the lecturer's hour the backbone of the Order. He anticipates large results from the August field meetings and believes that they will surpass in numbers and in interest those of previous years.

The President Says—

Organization has become necessary in the business world. It is no less necessary for farmers. Such a movement as the grange movement is good in itself and is capable of well nigh infinite further extension for good.—President Roosevelt.

Masters of granges should not allow slipshod methods to any department of grange work, whether in the transaction of business or in degree work. Even in the matter of moving a resolution or an appropriation there is a right way to do it, and only one. Little things count.

A grange lecturer says that the use of printed programmes has not only increased interest in the work, but has actually doubled the attendance.

How Paris Deals with Rats.

A direct and humanitarian system of dealing with the rat pest is that of the Paris sewers. A naked electric wire is stretched about six inches above the ground, and on it are strung pieces of horseflesh. The rats jump at the bait and are "electrocuted."

FINANCIAL BENEFITS.

Do We Give Them Too Much Prominence in Selecting Members?

(Special Correspondence.)

Should we give the financial benefit to be derived from grange membership more prominence than we do at the present time, or should we give it less? is a question which no doubt would be answered in more than one way, depending somewhat on one's observation and experience. With a very large number of people it is of the first importance to them to understand that they are to be benefited in a financial way in order to induce them to become interested enough to seek membership in the grange.

However, very many people who join the grange from a purely mercenary motive become so interested in the social and educational features of the Order that they wonder how they lived so long without these advantages and are not only willing but anxious to put their shoulders to the wheel and help to keep things moving so that people would retain their membership although the material benefits were eliminated, but if it had not been for the hope of financial gain to start with we should never have had the opportunity to enlighten them as to the best and most important object of grange membership.

The grange being so much more popular than twenty or even ten years ago, it is not so necessary to put the financial benefits foremost to every one we desire to have become a member of the grange, but all who join the grange makes more rapid strides in securing a good, strong, strong co-operative insurance company which requires grange membership to be eligible to receive the benefits of insurance. In proof of this assertion we need but to call attention to what we in this state where granges once strong and prosperous have become dormant because the grange insurance companies in an unprotected community, where there are no granges to shelter the order. This alone appears to be positive proof that it is necessary to still keep prominent the hope of financial gain.

It is true there are other financial benefits to be derived from grange membership. Co-operative buying has been a great success in many localities and no doubt has added very materially toward increasing the grange membership. In the declaration of purposes promulgated forty years ago we find that one of the primary objects was to buy and sell together. Of course the end in view was financial gain. Powers of today are not so very much different from those of forty years ago, and it is necessary to hold out about the same inducements to attract their attention as then.

At the present time our Order has advantages in its favor as against the odds of forty or even twenty years ago. Now it is very popular, and no one, no matter what name he holds, thinks it beneath his dignity to become a member of this great and influential organization. In the early history of the Order this was not so, and there were some people who against the odds of forty or even twenty years ago. Now it is very popular, and no one, no matter what position he holds, thinks it beneath his dignity to become a member of this great and influential organization. In the early history of the Order this was not so, and there were some people who

All well informed students of grange growth will agree that one of the chief factors of its success was the excellent management of the officials for the subordinate grange as planned by its founders. The lecturer's mission was wisely made chief executive, the overseer his assistant; the secretary made the organ of the grange, and all other officials were created for important and beautiful work, but had the careful study and research of those men failed to engage the importance of the lecturer's office the chief executive of the order and to meet the demand for the lecturer's work of our Order would become useless.—L. J. Price.

Iowa's Progress.

Iowa has been for many years altogether dormant as to grange matters, but seven new granges have been organized there this year. It was once the very stronghold of grangeism, but political and financial gain got in its deadly and disorganizing work, and the grange went down in quick order. We are glad to know that the tide is turning.

What the Grange Offers.

The grange offers to the farmers of the United States a means of combination, of harmony of action, such as they have never before possessed. It offers them the means of expressing their views as a body and enforcing them.

The four subordinate grange degrees may be conferred at the same meeting, but not on the same candidate. The first two degrees must be conferred at one meeting and the second two at another if on the same candidate.

Model Schoolhouse.

At a recent session of Wayne county (N. Y.) Pomona grange a student from Cornell Agricultural college spoke upon rural schools. In his remarks he described the model schoolhouse that President Bailey has at Ithaca, "with two doors, one filled with desks as usual, the other a laboratory or workroom, with benches and tools, and a window garden full of plants, showing that Prof. Bailey believes in industrial teaching."

The Working Grange.

One of the first lessons that experience taught the early pioneers of the Order was that after the organization of a grange, it is for it to live and grow, it must be given some work to do. A. R. Moss of Tredonia grange, N. Y., in a letter to O. H. Kelley in 1895, said: "We must have work if we succeed."

Political Discussion.

It is a mistaken idea of some that it is improper to discuss political matters in a grange meeting. Nothing could be more inconsistent. On the other hand, it is our duty to take up any and all questions that concern our welfare, not as partisans, but in a fair, candid and intelligent manner, and this surely is consistent with the best interest of agriculture and for the greatest good to the greatest number.—W. H. Vary.

The Wide Field.

The grange is not a one line organization, its fields of usefulness are as many, as wide and as diversified as are the fields, orchards and gardens of our farms. Keep them all well filled.

We have heard of granges where several candidates for membership are initiated on an at one time. This is absolutely unconstitutional and should never be done.

Keep Girls Young.

"It is hard to take a back seat for the younger generation occupying the front seats," says a millionaire's widow, who is not through being youthful, though she has two grown-up daughters. She thinks the "restraint" which wealthy French mothers exercise over the dressing of their young daughters, and the whole system of this maternal mastery could be seen to be unnecessary. Until she is married, if that event takes place when she is young, says the widow, "it seems this is dressed almost as if she were a schoolroom child. Supposing she remains unwed at 21, she is still dressed after a uniform plan, so that the mother may continue to dress youthfully yet have toilets entirely different in style from her daughters."—Exchange.

RELIEF FOR THE UNFORTUNATE.

Where the United States Is Behind European Countries.

The plan for establishing a state labor colony incidentally calls attention to the backwardness of the new world in two important matters, the relief of honest men out of employment and the suppression of vagrants. Save for the work done chiefly by private organizations, in a few large cities, there would be absolutely nothing in the United States which is Swiss, German or Dutch charity worker might compare to the labor colonies in the United States which Mr. Swiss, German or Dutch charity worker might compare to the labor colonies in the United States which Mr. Bellamy has, whose country is overrun by vagabonds, can attest with pride to relief measures which have already been much to every one suffering due to the enforced continuous idleness of from 8.5 per cent. to seven per cent of all workingmen. The idea of allotting small gardens to men out of work in the country and put into practice by Gen. van den Bosch in Holland so far back as 1818—today there are 3,000 poor families are thus supported in the little kingdom. The process of Paris are dotted with some 7,000 plots assigned by the Workmen's Garden Society to the unemployed, either gratis or at a nominal cost.

MATTER FOR THE SCIENTISTS.

Theory as to Whether We Live Inside or Outside Earth.

There are a number of believers in the theory that we are living inside instead of outside of the earth. The unpleasant people want us to admit that we are living in hell, which is like a huge nut. Just what good it will do us to admit this isn't clear. About the only benefit to be derived from the information, as far as we can see at present, is that the people who hold the theories may prepare themselves for a hard lump against the inner side of the shell if they ever go up for high jump.

We are also told that the accepted idea of this kernel in the nut theory will explain many things—some of which we remember.

It will also explain a great many things with which we are familiar and which, on the whole, we like pretty well.

This leads us to remark that we prefer to believe we are out in the same time if the inside facts are contradictory we are open to conviction.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Queer Effect of Extreme Cold.

Some idea of the effect of extreme cold can be gained from the account given by Dr. Wood of an incident which occurred when an expedition was in search of Franklin. The crew organized some amateur theatricals, and Dr. Kane, in the encyclopedia was so excessive that "we could hear not the performance; any connected coherence of delivery was accompanied by volumes of sonorous thunder sounds. When an actress performer took off his coat he actually lost a piece of clothing."

THIS PENAL COLONY A MODEL.

Brazil Seems to Have Solved One of Civilization's Problems.

The penal colony of the state of Paranahuco, Brazil, is on an island off the coast. There are about 600 convicts at present. They arrive at 6 a. m. and work till 5 p. m. for the state on building, cotton and a superior quality. After two o'clock they work for themselves. The island is one of the most orderly and productive bits of Brazil. It is a model convict colony and the cheapest run of any in the world.

A group of islands to which the penal one belongs is where the equator and south connection of Brazil divide, and it is surrounded by a vast amount of quiet sea, full of all kinds of fish, valuable commercially. As convicts labor may be had at ten cents a day there is every reason for fine fishing concessions the o. It is regarded as a desirable look in for a coaling station. The islands also have valuable phosphate deposits.

Abelard and Heloise.

Heloise was noted as much for her intellectual ability as for her personal beauty. She was familiar with the literature of or five languages—Italian, French, Greek, Latin and Hebrew. Her knowledge was remarkable, her conversational powers were brilliant. It was her bright mind and varied learning that first attracted the attention of Abelard. Abelard died 1142, Heloise 1164. First buried at St. Marcel, Abelard's remains were shifted several times, but finally reached the well-known tomb at Paraclete Chapel, wherein also rest the ashes of Heloise.—New York American.

If You Suffer from Headache,

Why suffer needlessly from headache. It is not a normal condition and unless due to some functional disorder to be relieved you usually can be traced to overeating or to sleeping in badly ventilated rooms.

Be careful about your diet, take plenty of exercise, do not overtrain your grips; above all get plenty of fresh air and your headaches are apt to vanish.

Never sleep in a room that has not at least one window up high, winter and summer. It will not do to ventilate from the room or the hall, which is loaded in air fresh from out of doors.

Just One of the Ways.

The defendants made recently by a New York judge that bad cooking drives men to drink only gives the unfortunate her another excuse for blaming everything on the woman.

A CURIOUS FARM.

Requires No Fences and Never Has a Wheeled Vehicle.

Within sight of the town of Jasper, Mo., in the Ozarks, a settler has a farm which probably is unlike any other in the world.

The farm occupies the tableland on the summit of a ridge and is inclosed with a fence which no animal has ever broken through. It does not rise above the surface of the farm, but falls sheer from the edge a distance of many feet. The man who homesteaded the tableland had a hard climb up the face of a perpendicular cliff to reach the comparatively level summit.

At one point a ledge extends out a few inches and along the face of the cliff at an upward grade. By fetlock the ledge and making use of every about points of rocks and of shrubs growing in the fissures the discoverer pulled himself to the summit and found a surface well covered with soil and a luxuriant vegetation.

Gradually he improved the ledge so it he could carry up tools and seed. By hoeing and drilling he cleared a narrow trail, up which he was able to take first some pigs and then a cow. Later on he took up a horse.

And that today is the condition of this curiously protected farm. No stile he has turned a wheel within its limits of a plankade. The five acres has multiplied and consumes the grain raised. Some stores brown and the trail completely fence in the logs and cattle. When the farmer has stock to be driven he remains down the private trail and strikes the road to Jasper.—Kansas City Star.

HIS CRYING BABY.

And the Cheerful Elderly Man Who Was Generous With Advice.

A young man about twenty-five years old was sitting in one of the third class compartments of a train the other day terrifiers with a baby on his knee, and his apprehension in pacifying the howling child attracted the attention of a cheerful elderly man who by man walked up with a smile of pity, and queried:

"Are you the sore you that baby to hold while she went to see about her luggage, dear?"

"Yes."

"And you expect her back. I suppose?"

"I think she'll come back."

"Well, this makes me laugh. A woman played the same trick on me once, but we saw ever will again. Young man, you've been 'done.' You've been taken for a country greenhorn and been met. Better give the baby over to a policeman and make a move before your reporter gets at you."

"Oh, she'll come back," replied the young man as he looked anxiously around.

"Not will, eh? Joke grows richer and richer. What makes you think she'll come?"

"Because she's my wife, and this is our first baby."

"Oh-h-h, I see," muttered the old man, whose hilarity suddenly evaporated, and when he also discovered that he'd lost his train he kicked a dog that had been left unguarded on the platform.—London Answers.

A Bridge of Coffins.

When the British forces were marching into Peking in 1900, after the capture of the Taku forts, one of the rivers became so swollen with the heavy rains that it was rendered almost impassable. While in this quandary a bright idea suddenly struck one of our officers. Being well aware that the Chinese generally order their coffins years in advance and keep them on the premises and also that they are perfectly air tight, he consulted with his brother officers, with the result that orders were given to search all the houses of the village and collect every coffin. With the aid of a few empty casks the soldiers constructed a pontoon bridge of coffins sufficiently strong to bear the artillery, and the river was thus passed in safety.—London Standard.

An Odd Post Card.

The most curious post card ever produced, according to a leading philatelist, was one which the Japanese government put out in 1875.

In describing it he says it is "really a sheet of paper rolled so as to form four pages of a narrow book. On the front page is a border inclosing an impressed stamp for the postage rate and a space for the address. On the second page are printed in native characters only minute directions for use. On the third page are ruled a number of vertical lines, between which the sender was to write his communications, and the fourth page was a blank." They remained in use until 1878.

Cutting Off Debate.

"Are you asking for a kiss?" inquired the congressman's sweetheart. "That was my idea." "Then you need not speak any further. You have leave to print."

The fer-de-lance is found on the islands of Martinique and Saint Lucia, where the natives commonly refer to it with a description of jungle nomenclature. The fault of its pronounce regard, has seems to be the fact that it does not warn the intruders of its nearness after the manner of the colors in the rattlesnake, but distinctly the coils and, slightly vibrating tail, warns aware.

If the unsuspecting traveler should blow an sign of mettle intend he may be allowed to pass unbroken within two yards of the coiled serpent—not a closer approach is safe to be considered as a challenge, and the serpent, not deeply resting its ugly head, may wave the frequent bite some method of self defense. He may lift his foot or brush his stick in a menacing manner, if he does, he is lost. The lower coils will expand, bringing the herbivous coil, neck and all a few feet nearer, the head points like a leveled rifle, then darts forward with energy sufficient, guided by an unerring instinct for the selection of the least protected parts of the body.

And the vindictive brute is ready to repeat its bite. For a moment it lies back, trembling with excitement, and if felled by a blow of its victim's stick will snap away savagely at stones and sticks or even, like a wounded panther, at its own body.

A HAPPY SOLUTION.

The Way the Family Compromised on a Vexed Problem.

There had been a long standing difference of opinion in the Plunkett family concerning the dining table. Mrs. Plunkett maintained that its legs were too numerous and might to be lengthened at least half an inch.

"It doesn't do any of our chairs, Jared, and you know it," she contended. "When we go down to the table there are no legs above it. You could have pieces of wood glued on the ends of the legs. That would be easier than to saw off the ends of all the chair legs."

"A fool proposition at best," retorted Mr. Plunkett. "I think the table legs are just right. But I'm willing to compromise the matter. You have been wanting a hardwood floor in this sitting room for a long time, haven't you?"

"Yes."

"Well, we can have that new kind of hardwood flooring that it is all on top of the old floor. That will raise the sitting room three-eighths of an inch or more, and that will raise the table, of course, just so much. How will that do?"

This seemed to be a fair proposition, and without a moments hesitation Mrs. Plunkett accepted it as a satisfactory compromise.—Youth's Companion.

It Was in His Head.

Balzac once promised Lirieux, the author of the Odeon theater in Paris, a five act drama, "The Springs of Quinola." He was so busy with other work, however, that not till he had been long and urgently importuned did he promise to read his piece to the company the next week. The company gathered about him on the day appointed, and he read his five act play fluently through to the end. Lirieux was enthusiastic, ran up to shake hands with the great writer and turned over the pages of the manuscript, whose contents had pleased him mightily. But what was this? There were only four acts. The last page of the manuscript were blank. In surprise the manager asked what it all meant. Balzac smiled and admitted that he had not yet written out the fifth act, but declared that he had it as clearly in his head as if it already stood on paper. "And continue the play justifully. "I have in the same head two more outcomes of the plot in one, the one I just read doesn't please you."

Bunyan's Sharp Answer.

John Bunyan wrote "The Pilgrim's Progress" in Bedford jail, where he was confined for his religion. A Quaker came to the prison and thus addressed him:

"Friend Bunyan, the Lord hath sent me to seek for thee, and I have been through several counties in search of thee, and now I am glad I have found thee."

Bunyan replied, "Friend, thou dost not speak truth in saying the Lord sent thee to seek for me, for the Lord well knows that I have been in this jail for some years, and if he had sent thee he would have sent thee here directly."

It is the lack of nerve force that makes the stomach, heart, lungs, etc., work imperfectly—become sick. Dr. Miles' Nervine cures the sick when it restores nerve strength, and puts the power behind the organs to do their work.

"Almost three years I suffered from nervous prostration, and was in a condition of the body, I could not eat or sleep with comfort, or walk or talk without trembling like an aspen leaf. In a bad condition. My doctor did not seem to do me any good. I had tried so many remedies that I did not have much hope of ever of there doing me any good. I read of Dr. Miles' Nervine and bought a bottle. I began to improve from the first, and after a few days felt like a new person. It has only been a few weeks since I took the bottle, the improvement in my whole system, I am very grateful because since I have slept soundly. I have had absolutely no return of my nervous troubles."

NATION LIVING BEYOND MEANS.

The forthcoming statement of the treasury receipts and expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, will show a big falling off in the receipts as compared to 1925 and a large increase in expenditures. The excess of expenditures over receipts will approximate $600,000,000, exceeded only once since the Civil War. In 1918 there was a deficit of $9,249,000, and in 1920 another of $360,000,000. In each of the four intervening years the receipts fell below the disbursements. The receipts this year were $500,000,000 less than those of 1917, full or all $3,000,000,000 from those of 1918, while receipts from internal revenue will be short $150,000,000. Internal revenue were $2,559,000,000, or $800,000,000 more than for 1917. The Furness vessel dispiting the closing year will have cost the government $28,000,000, as against $27,000,000 in 1917.

An appeal has been sent out for clothes and shelter and it is expected the State will come to the aid of the stricken people. Two Firemen Hurt and Damage of $100,000 Caused by Fire.

Two firemen were injured and $100,000 worth of property was destroyed by a fire in the city proper of Jersey City. The blaze started in a factory in Jersey City. A defective electric light wire is believed to have caused the flames, which started in the fifteen-story building on Newark avenue, owned by John Mullins and occupied by Hilmont, Hoefle, dry goods dealers, and spread rapidly to adjoining structures. William Hynes and John Hoke were caught under a falling wall and their legs were broken.

PLANS U. S. ARMY OF 250,000.

War Department Would Amalgamate the Regulars and Militia.

The War Department has tentatively plans for the virtual amalgamation of 250,000 men, comprising all the regular and national guard troops in the United States, into an army ready to answer the call of the President. Assistant Secretary of War Oliver has given out this information.

The War Department plan means nothing more nor less than that the national guard units will be ready for the so-called national guard expansion plans will cease to exist as such and immediately become units of the regular army, subject to the control of the President and the Secretary of War.

"This scheme" said Mr. Oliver, "is the first move in the plan to make this country a military power. Before this we have had no authority over the State troops, better known, perhaps, as militia and national guard regiments. Now, what we propose to do is to organize these State troops and all the regular forces into eight army corps, and the New England States, New York and other divisions in the military districts known as the Department of the East will constitute the first army corps. As it was planned the War Department will be able to put into the field almost immediately an army of 250,000 men. Part will be perfectly trained and the efficiency of the rest will be so improved that they will form a smooth working force."

BRYAN ON THE PLATFORM.

Calls It "Silent Repudiation of Roosevelt'an Principles."

Writing a letter previous the Democratic platform in his paper, the commoner, He denounces the document as "a silent repudiation of almost every Roosevelt'an principle." He attacks the planks on currency, the trusts and the negro problem, calling the last-named section the "groundwork upon which a party" President Roosevelt is praised and his policy commended in contrast with the action of the party as expressed in the platform. On this point Mr. Bryan says:

The highest aspirations of the American people have found a voice. In the election in Iowa and Nebraska the republican Presidents who have failed to furnish a voice for the highest aspirations of the American people. They must exalted service represents the best ideals and noblest purposes of Theodore Roosevelt." Democrats endorsed his lead in a public sense of duty and administration.

But the President must not feel that he is the only Republican deserving of praise. The recent Chicago, responding to the platforms, have been full of patriotic and the Republican leaders have been keen to see the people in the forward march to better government. What does the President think of being branded with Republican Senators and members of Congress in old-fashioned party politics?

How to Deal with Anarchy.

Thus the policy of severe punishment of armed anarchists and the smoking of servers of them will only feed the spirit of anarchism which results in anarchy in the position taken by Victor U. W. Dubois in a thoughtful article for the June Van Norden's Magazine. He asks "Is it not possible for the government to assume a sympathetic attitude toward this organization and insist that the progress made by the anarchists is due largely to the "masters of the people of the poor to those who have intelligence and time enough to study them." In the past they have been among the people they "whose new ends treatment has not well and their lives are such that they are self-sacrifice." Besides, much of the anarchist complaint is attributed to the transit methods of the city police in handling the poor people of the cities.

GROVER CLEVELAND IS CALLED BY DEATH

Only Surviving Ex-President of the United States Succumbs to Long Illness.

END COMES UNEXPECTEDLY.

Country Shocked by News of Demise of Democratic Leader Twice Elected President.

Grover Cleveland, the only surviving ex-President of the United States, died suddenly Wednesday morning at his home in Princeton, N. J. While it was known that Mr. Cleveland had for the past three months been suffering from a severe attack of rheumatic gout and acute indigestion, his death came as a complete surprise to the country.

He had been a sufferer from gout and diabetes for more than two years. Early in 1906 he was stricken with an attack of indigestion, the result of diabetes, and for weeks was unable to partake of any except liquid nourishment. A relapse in the South improved his health considerably.

Early last year he had a recrudescence of the attack of indigestion and for some weeks his condition was such that his life was despaired of. Mr. Cleveland made a splendid fight for life and won. In February last diabetes began to make itself felt again, and Mr. Cleveland became subject to spells of unconsciousness, coupled with with his ability to assimilate food. Death finally came at 8:45 a. m. Wednesday.

Life of Cleveland a Busy One.

Grover Cleveland, the twenty-second and twenty-fourth President of the United States, was born March 18, 1837, in Caldwell, N. Y. In 1841 the Cleveland family removed to Fayetteville, N. Y., where young Grover received his first schooling, and where later at an early age he served as a clerk in a small country store. Still later, when his parents settled in Clinton, N. Y., he pursued his studies further, and when only 17 he was appointed assistant teacher in the New York institution for the blind. In 1855 Cleveland served a clerkship with the firm of Rogers, Bowen & Rogers at Buffalo. It was in that office that Cleveland began to read law. He was admitted to the New York bar in 1859. Mr. Cleveland received his first public office when appointed assistant district attorney of Erie county. In 1863 he joined the firm of Lanning, Cleveland & Folsom. In 1881 he was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Buffalo and was elected by the largest majority ever given in that city, although the Republican State ticket was carried. In 1882 Mr. Cleveland ran for Governor of New York against Charles J. Folger, then Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, and was by a plurality of nearly 200,000. The administration was notable for the simple and unostentatious way in which he conducted the business of the State.

At the Democratic national convention held in Chicago in July, 1884, Cleveland was nominated for his party as its candidate for the presidency of the United States and at the election in the following November was chosen to that office. It was during his first term that Cleveland

Ex-President's Estimate.

The recent disbarment by Secretary of the Treasury of the cashiering of Attorneys Irene H. and Edward Spaulding, Mills, Bierwes & Co. and Edward C. Goddin in the Spaulding case, was confirmed in land honesty decisions, was declared unconstitutional and therefore null and void by Justice Wright of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in a decision handed down Saturday. The court in the case published that the land laws disbarred practitioners without due process of law, but he scared under life when, with a rough shake and a smile, the Confederate raised his head and said, "Mosby has got you."

"There is no use in resisting," reserved Mosby coolly. "It means, sir, that you are my prisoner, and I take the reality in possession of the place."

Knowing it fruitless to struggle against such a force, Stoughton drew and dressed hurriedly, guarded all the way through the Confederates, who had secured the rest of the staff officers in the house. Placing the general between two of his men, Mosby returned to the green, where he met the rest of his men, who had left the scene of capture position about the town. On taking an account of what had been gathered in it was found that, besides Brigadier General Stoughton, they had secured two captains, thirty other prisoners, together with their arms, ammunition, and fifty-eight horses.

The return trip was safely made, though the reality, whose prisoners were strange to mounted than their captors, were fearful that some enemy might be taken that would make them of the few who were slumbering. As soon as they were out of earshot of the town they set out at a brisk pace and about dawn passed within the yards of the Alexandria and Fairfax. The great mounts of the enemy could be seen bounding up in the dark, and the cry was raised, "Stoughton Barker, of New York, here mode a break for liberty, was brought back by a sharp shot, throwing beyond the reach of the fortifications Mosby's men struck for the woods, and, after a short run, lines, and were safe from any interference, leaving to the Confederates the Confederate authorities.

Another exciting and very remunerative adventure of the rangers was when they captured a Federal pay train, from which they secured the amount of greenbacks. It was in October, 1864, that the raid was made. Mosby, with his men, came and informed Mosby that there was a fine opening to the valley of the Shenandoah Railroad, the Ohio Railroad, so a party was secured and they set out for the place, which was in Duffield station, at which place the pay train was to pass, reaching the spot just in the time to lay down the obstructions were placed upon the track, so that when the train came dashing down it came to an abrupt stop.

A guard was placed over the engine and the passengers were ordered to the ground. Meanwhile, the paymaster, having in charge the money for the troops, the amount reaching $170,000, which was secured by West Atlantic, one of Mosby's men. Although generally reported his luck to Mosby, and when the fall was collected it was equally divided out among the men. Mosby refusing to accept any share. The paymasters were robbed of their clothes, which went as individual spoils. Then the cars were set on fire, and the band went back with twenty prisoners and fifteen horses, besides the money and the two paymasters, the latter being sent on to prison. One of the paymasters was a brother to General Hoggins.

Another time a train was captured near Catlett's station, on what is now the Southern National. Lee was making his preliminary preparations for his Gettysburg campaign, and was covering Washington, while Hessamon's Cavalry Corps was stationed in the country about fifty miles from the capital. General Stuart had sent to Mosby by Captain Richard Sinclair a small mountain howitzer, and it was determined to use it on the train on the railroad, which was employed by the Union army for the conveying of troops. Force being at Catlett's would be a great aid to the Confederacy. So the telegraph lines were cut, and the train was stopped by a shot from the howitzer. The

Then he entered politics, and soon became one of the leaders in his fatherland. Cure was gifted with a memory that could be called into service at will. Cure's speeches were generally delivered without notes, and he could quote from the Bible and other books, and from his own speeches, he keeps closely in touch with his constituents, and his phenomenal memory can call up facts and statistics as readily as another can turn to them in the printed page. Some time ago reading a political man expressed the belief that there is a possibility of his appointment to a place in the Cabinet of the President-elect. It is said that this belief is a factor for the restoration of his sight an operation will be performed.

A noted society man and capitalist of Chicago, Illinois, is the son of Oliver H. P. Belmont at his home at Hempstead, L. I. Mr. Belmont was the son of the late August Belmont and married the American representative of the Rothschilds. He is at his ease in Paris, the daughter of Commodore Oliver Hazard Perry who was the famous naval O. H. P. Belmont, battle on Lake Erie in the year of 1812. Mr. Belmont was born in New York in 1858. He was ten times a millionaire and had a magnificent home, Brookhill Villa, near Hempstead. His wife was one of the show pieces of that fashionable watering place. Preparations were under way when he left for the erection of a house in New York.

FRANCIS B. LOOMIS.

Information comes from Washington that Francis B. Loomis, formerly Assistant Secretary of State, is to be made commissioner to the Japanese Exposition of 1912. It would be similar to the work he performed in Paris. Loomis was at one time a newspaper correspondent at Washington and was appointed to a similar capacity in China. He served as minister to Venezuela, and has been making a special study of commercial opportunities and conditions in Japan. He would be an admirable addition to the consular service of the United States, and his appointment would be a most popular one. Loomis would be a most popular one. CHAPTER X.

Some days after the Prince del Pino made his first appearance in Washington, two people were taking in the drawing room of a small house in S. street at the hour which the French call, very curiously, "between the dog and the wolf."

Of the pair by the gleaming, the man was standing up with his back to an ultramarine velvet portiere, which he leaned his huge frame, gingerly looking down from time to time at the girl opposite in the depths of a Market-Hunting-ham chair.

"Think of it?" he was saying, in rather subdued tones. "I was already engaged to marry yesterday, just coming out of the Sheridan, when the cable was handed me. I was for just one moment thinking that I couldn't keep my appointment! What was it we were going to do? Oh, yes, go up the Monument. Yesterday seems about forty years ago!"

"It was very good of you to come and tell me about it," the girl said gently, "very friendly!"

"Was it?" Gerald Haier whirled abruptly around and stared with sudden absorption out of the window. "I was a bluder of you to let me," he said. "There's a certain relief in speaking. When that cable came yesterday—"

"Do tell me about it," she interrupted, and then continued, in an undertoned music that sent a sort of nervous shock further down the man's spine—"my aunt is your first cousin, and I know little or nothing about her."

"Is it possible?" he said, with a sudden look of surprise. "Why, I thought that she'd been doing at one of the embassies for eight!"

"Did Dino was there, too," remarked Hulet, considering her information with some accuracy, "and he was at the horse show with her that afternoon. I suppose they're together all the time." Here he felt it incumbent to sing his shoulders idiotly. "That's what they're for."

"So you think that's what he's here for?" echoed the girl.

"There was the faintest hint of interrogation, incredulity in her tones, that made Hulet glance curiously at the small lig ure, the dim, opaque shading of the June twilight accentuating the classic fairness of her hair and childish outlines of face and figure with mellowed distinction.

"Why? he stammered, "any one can see that the man wants to marry Gussie, and I really don't see any special reason why she shouldn't take him, do you?"

His air of impersonal amusement and indifference was a sorry mask through which a sort of unwonted anxiety was mentioned Annette's face.

"Women do sometimes generally evaded the appeal even while answering it. "Do you think they're in love with each other?" she asked quietly.

Here a Gerald Haier assumed the thinking, unresponsive expression with which one prepares for the mental acrobatics of a difficult logomachy. "What is love?" He surveyed the girl through a mental microscope with scientific impersonality. "Well, I suppose they think so, too. It's just a sort of temporary fever that attacks one at intervals. Most of us have it, or think we have—which is the same thing. I'm not sure, Miss Annette, in case, you're immune, that's one great, great comfort—that's never one of us again!"

He spoke with savage conviction, conscious of scars which were still painful to the touch. "No, I think Gussie and Dino are too entirely sane to fall in love—lucky for them! They're simply, I suppose, doing what your papers would call a brilliant match. He has the title, and she—everything else!"

"He has the title?" repeated Annette. She sat staring at the lamed-faced man before her, quivering at his utter unconsciousness of his own probably equal advantages in that respect at least. Gerald only realized, that she was not his devotee were concerned, there was little or nothing to choose between Dino and the new Earl of Lindsay. If Gerald only realized it, disaster—the social disaster—was his today.

Annette lips parted impulsively and then closed again. It seemed such a pity that women that a splendid fellow like this should be sacrificed on substitutes all around.

The girl spoke with sudden heat. "Gussie is my cousin Mr. Hulet," she said decisively, "and I love her, of course, as we both do, caring for her, she loved, and we do also spoke—"tell me frankly—do you think that she could make a man who loved her happy? Do you think he content—well? with what she has to offer?"

Gerald did not hesitate an instant. "I should think that she could, if he loved her with a sincerity that was almost pathetic. Then, she was loved sincerely herself, thankful for anything she could give him."

Then, stiffening with the inevitable contraction that followed such moments, he stood looking across the room, the much Prince del Pino felt an enthusiasm, a vague enjoyment of the prince, which, was not entirely his to Gussie's happiness.

"But we do have to be back, you see—have to go out by the ten-thirty train so as to take the Pennsylvania steamer from New York. Good-by."

Annette followed him to the door.

"Don't you think"—she made an effort quickly—"wouldn't it be possible for you to stop in and see Gussie if only for a moment this afternoon? I think she'll be hurt if she finds you've been in town and looking her up."

"Up afraid I can't! Rather regret—sorry—but I'm engaged for tomorrow. Besides, why should she know? You'll have to keep my secret. Miss Hulet, I'm ashamed to have been such a fool. There's a great deal to be done and I'm getting frightfully lazy!"

Indeed, the little hall outside was unusually dim.

Feeling for his hat with some hustle in the shadowy Hulet disclosed a sheaf of cards, stuck in the rack, that came rolling into with light touches, and, even as he opened the door, one fell fluttering on to the steps outside, where the faint Italian sprite waited up to him impatiently in behalf of the feeble light. Prince Rodolfo del Pino," and a curious crowd of the men who had been at Gussie's track of those alien footsteps that had headed its hunting ground.

Hulet stared at the little strip of pasteboard with a grunt. "Prince! Who the deuce has been here? He closed the door with exasperated care and stalked down the steps.

Certainly Annette had had very little to say about del Pino, yet, on the other hand, what was there to say? He was a prince and a fine fellow passenger of the Majestic hunt up another? and what a pitiable concern was it of his—Gerald Hulet's?

His mind reverting to newer, more personal, more painful matters, Gerald Hulet made his way thoughtfully to the Shoreham corner. He at the time had he cline to a rubber ball.

Feeling quite still, he looked about of him a very keen look in his eyes, for Gussie, coming up the avenue toward him with familiarity jaunty gait, was a slim, supple, unmistakably "fine" young man.

"Hi!" ejaculated Hulet.

His face set in an uncomprehending crease, he went forward again, looking stiffly ahead of him.

"Not my friend M. Hulet?" Del Pino stopped short. "This Washington, indeed, supplies the unexpected! He seemed the Elizabethan with smiling eyes and cold mouth. Which is the way you are you doing here?"

Hulet ignored the cordially outstretched hand.

"Very much what you are, I fancy," he returned, with such conspicuous lack of cordiality as his part had been other conditions kind and deserved.

"Then you must be passing through very unusually," he commended mirthfully. "For me—my kind friends have provide a sensitively some sensitive disappointment. Mais a propos—you come perhaps from Gussie? Ah, I see! Well, I am of the charming ones, which acquired a sudden indefinite pleasure. Is she well?"

"Very well, thank you," he replied, with a stiffness that contemplated the

CHAPTER XI.

Dinner at Chevy Chase was nearing its close.

Along the broad, trellised verandas, hung with Chinese lanterns and vivid green vines, were ranged little tables, each surrounded by half a dozen people, and their gayety, at most, was far from intemperately.

Into a dreamy, sensuous kind, his impression into senses pleasantly thrilled by the light, the odor, the murmur of the gay scene, the much Prince del Pino felt an enthusiasm, a vague enjoyment of the prince, which, was not entirely his to Gussie's happiness.

This was to be his last night—he told himself that, as he had done a dozen times before during his Washington week, with the secret consciousness that the morrow would find him still in the stage, playing his part to the same appreciative audiences. Like most successful actors, Rodolfo Sarto had become dependent on the shine of the footlights. He really could not bear himself away, could not make up his mind to give up the life which had become second nature to him.

Seated at Mrs. Waring's right, with few other crowns spirits surrounding his table, himself the bright, particular luminary of the occasion, the dark prince kept the talk and laughter up to concert pitch, while efficient waiters kept him supplied with the delicacies which his epicurean soul craved, while on every side stretched vistas very grateful to the eye of the artist Hierophant.

"One could almost fancy oneself at a Parisian cafe in the Bois," he murmured aloud, with a reminiscent sigh.

Gussie met his glance smilingly. Indeed, her attention had been pretty obviously concentrated to him throughout the entire meal, much to the disgust of her beau, a stodgy Senator, at whose right hand she sat.

"Yes, it is a bit like Paris," she assented, in answer to the other remark. "The open restaurant effect, and then the cosmopolitan type of the crowd."

"The crowd," echoed the black prince. He shrugged his shoulders, lowering his voice mysteriously, then, in rapid French, "Must there always be the crowd? Can never we are you alone?" His boyish eyes met hers for the fraction of a minute. "Impossible, I am to delay you, and in my mouse?"

Gussie's answer was drowned in the sudden rattle of chairs as the people at the table rose to their feet.

"No, I shall not forget," she called at him over her shoulder, starting off and down the way towards the veranda steps.

A moment later the little party were on the lawn, grouped under the vivid green vines of a cozy bower, the mating tops blotting the night sky. Settling himself at a respectable distance from Mrs. Waring, now tete-a-tete with her best, Sarto leaned back into the big blue-and-yellow chair, a curiously aesthetic smile on his lips, as the Senator, quite unaware, began on the most of Gussie's brief absence.

Mrs. Waring was interested in matters of politics and money—that, under the circumstances, made a very large rival had already distanced him! How little the woman opposite realized that her beaux, her interests and ambitions were all centered on—her ex-chaperon!

Turning the cigar in his mouth, Senator Waring was calculating. "One should be very careful in such a case. Gussie is a fine young woman, and had her the winning cards seemed more certainly than ever, that she would be, when the time came, the wife of a millionaire. Yes, and the mother of a future Senator!

"Not my friend M. Hulet?" Del Pino stopped short. "This Washington, indeed, supplies the unexpected! He seemed the Elizabethan with smiling eyes and cold mouth. Which is the way you are you doing here?"

Hulet ignored the cordially outstretched hand.

"Very much what you are, I fancy," he returned, with such conspicuous lack of cordiality as his part had been other conditions kind and deserved.

CONCENTRATION ESSENTIAL.

By Rev. J. Henry Hartman

But one thing is needful.—Luke x. 42.

The text is an old fact restated in the form of a question. Concentration is the numerous and many-sided questions of our modern life.

In order to attain pre-eminence and success, men everywhere are coming to recognize more and more the necessity of concentration in the pursuit of some one thing. Michael Angelo, painting a fluted nave, painted it with the ambition that consumed him. He forgot himself, his ease and bodily fatigue, and at length the world crowned him as master of his art.

In the fields of music Handel is called a prince and the very soul of art. This, however, never could have been true of him, nor could he have written immortality into his sacred music, if he had not been the man whose passions and powers in the pursuit of one thing were offered on the altar of music. It has been said of him that his ardor for oratorial music caused the art of singing up through all the ages past. We need to catch the vision of the glorious past of our art, and let the glow of strength that comes from touch with great souls warm our souls.

We may read any kind of meaning we will into the words by which we are commanded. The Roman eagle making food may be a decisive person or only a hungry bird of prey. The text may allude needs the dynamic of that ideal, the sense of the great spirit of truth which is the inspiration of the Christian of our best thoughts and hopes and aims.

Let a man honestly follow his moral ideals; let him pay the price they will ever need to know that he has found in their achievement, and he will not be crushed as a worm. Rather he will come to a sense of the spiritual values of his service; he will find himself in their achievement, and he will not have lived for the kingdom of the spirit, he will know the power that works in us for the right.

SHORT METER SERMONS.

No man finds fame by hunting it.

There is no obedience under compulsion.

The rambling preacher seldom hits the mark.

Ideals of character are the conscience of society.

The man who finds himself who never decides himself.

The highest religion is to do the lowliest things well.

They who pour out their hearts never empty themselves.

A man may deceive himself, but he never fools destiny.

The most unpleasant experiences often arise from our smoothest tricks.

It's a waddy man who complains that the platform is not broad enough for him.

It is easy to shut our eyes to the brother who is down when our hungry hands are going out to the one who is up.

DON'TS FOR CHURCHMEN.

Don't confound morality with religion.

Don't mistake self-adulation for self-culture.

Don't expect to love when reverence has departed.

Don't become selfish because unselfishness is the essence of sin.

Don't cease your hearts to heaven if you want to dwell therein.

Don't think a lie unless you want to make a larger one.

Don't boast your helpfulness to others if you would not be regarded as self-satisfied.

Don't forget that the self-satisfied soul has come far short of satisfying God.

Don't hunt for a martyr's crown unless you are sure your head will bear one up.

Don't undertake to know more about God unless you are willing to know more about your fellowmen.

Evils of Drink.

In view of the horror and have wrought by drink upon the bodies and souls of men, in misery to the family, its threat against society, its assault upon defenseless children, its plague for vice and crime, its contribution to insanity and immorality, its withering influence on spiritual desire and its paralyzing influence on the churches, every Christian should be ready to accept the challenge of the eternal God: "Who will rise up for Me against the evildoers or who will stand up for Me against the workers of iniquity?"—Rev. J. A. Henry, Baldwin, Los Angeles.

Nature's Revelation.

Nature obscures by concealment. She too does by silence. Our universe is shot with a thousand tints, curtains and rich walls. He hides America behind clouds of darkness and mystery until the time is ripe. He conceals the secrets of the celestial machinery behind a veil of night. He has kept back the curtain for Isaac Newton. He surrounds fire and atoms with clouds and darkness until the fullness of time arrives.—Rev. N. D. Hillis, Congregationalist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

One of the most hopeful features of the religious movement is the realization that religion pays the best dividends in this life. It is a great investment.—Rev. E. W. Hunt, Unitarian, Boston.

MULE BLOCKS THE ERIE.

For Twenty-Five Minutes Train Was on an Air Line Road.

A small, bob-tailed mine attached to a rickety express wagon held up traffic on the main line of the Erie railroad for twenty-five minutes the other day. The mule was the driver. A few moments before a through express was in the same and a rusty wagon crawled up to a crossing a short distance above Paterson and stopped in the middle of the track. Instead of troubling foreign while, the board stuck around on this side and began to feed at a little mound of hay jolted from a passing farmer's wagon.

Suddenly the mule got in crossing legs. The grizzled negro driver, half dozing on his seat, awoke and noting the approach of a train brought down a heavy club on his steed's backbone. The mule kicked out and refused to move. A loud blast of the whistle passed unnoticed, so deep and profound was application of the big stick. The heavy train came to a standstill a few rods beyond the unbreakfasting mule.

Workmen shot up and a dozen heads appeared. The old negro, now thoroughly aroused, piled his club into the wagon and scrambled for the mule, simply wagged his stubby tail. Advice was freely tendered and accepted by the passengers. The driver lowered himself to the ground and taking the mule by the bridle attempted to lead him onward. The beast laid his ears back and refused to budge an inch. He demanded from them hoarly and sonorous brays. The mule was so often to be reminded of what had done for them; slavery in Egypt had passed remote, a sage, and the Israelites, forgetting what they had been oppressed by the peoples about them, had fallen into idolatry. He had always heard their every cry, and had promised them that they should have remembered them.

Then—Then was he Moses Your God?—The people had persisted in their demand for a leader, and Moses, fearing lest they lay their doing so was an act of rebellion against God. See 1 Sam. viii. 7.

The last.—Although the people were to have a king, they were to be taught that God was to be the chooser of the king. Moses was God's leader, and had led his Samuel to anoint Saul king. (Ch. ix. 16, 17, and x. 1.) But was that choice was to be ratified before all the people? Moses was God's leader, and had led his people out of Egypt, and God was not to assume that God is not interested in this matter of the choice of an appointing chosen king. Saul was God's choice, and God knew the power that works in us for the right.

Saul Chosen King.—I Samuel 9 and 10 Golden Text—"Thou shalt love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul."—Deut. vi. 5.

The words of our Golden Text were uttered by Moses in a message from God. They are part of Israel's "last words," in the form of a farewell address to the people, a message they would hardly forget. Moses had had a long reign, marked by many battles and many days of glory of prosperity. He was the long-lived man who now had become far tried hardest to use in the fear of God, and in spite of his age he had "good sight of the light of the morning," and much of the strength of his manhood was preserved, for one of the earth by clear shining after rain.

It is a very poetical description of what a king should be that David gives in their last words, recorded in 2 Samuel xxiii. 3-5, which we shall have to sing, measured by this standard.

Notes.

"Thou Saidst, Yea, Lord, the God of Israel"—The prophets of Israel performed a special function in the nation, and their great mission was to remind the people that Jehovah (the Lord) was their God, that they had done great things for them in the past and that they should do great things for them still; but He demanded from them loyalty and obedience. The prophet also often to be reminded of what God had done for them; slavery in Egypt had passed remote, a sage, and the Israelites, forgetting what they had been oppressed by the peoples about them, had fallen into idolatry. He had always heard their every cry, and had promised them that they should have remembered them.

Then—Then was he Moses Your God?—The people had persisted in their demand for a leader, and Moses, fearing lest they lay their doing so was an act of rebellion against God. See 1 Sam. viii. 7.

The last.—Although the people were to have a king, they were to be taught that God was to be the chooser of the king. Moses was God's leader, and had led his Samuel to anoint Saul king. (Ch. ix. 16, 17, and x. 1.) But was that choice was to be ratified before all the people? Moses was God's leader, and had led his people out of Egypt, and God was not to assume that God is not interested in this matter of the choice of an appointing chosen king. Saul was God's choice, and God knew the power that works in us for the right.

REPLY OF BEVERIDGE.

Tillman's Criticism of Roosevelt Merc Bucombe.

ALL PRESIDENTS ASSAULTED

The Most Recent Example of Autocracy Who Voids Nothing Even When Proved Wrong—Bryan's Platform, Cabinet and Motto.

Mr. President, about the criticisms of the press. We have read most American history, but one of us perhaps more than another, and this one thing we know, that every great president this country has ever had, that every great leader of the American people who has made an assault upon intrenched privilege and habitual usage the rights of the American masses, has been attacked. It was so with Washington. They charged him with wanting to become a king. They assailed him so that that great man, who fell for nothing but for the welfare of the country in whose liberation he had bled, actually said, "I wish to God I were dead and in my grave." They attacked him so that resolutions were passed when he ceased to be president thanking God that George Washington no longer inflicted the country.

Then came the next great heroic figure among American presidents, the greatest democrat, excepting only Jefferson, the nation ever produced—a Democrat in name only, however, but in everything that constitutes the substance of Republican principles one of the first of great Republicans—Andrew Jackson. He was a democrat, his enemies said; he was going to crush the liberties of the country, they declared. Last year I read with that thrilling interest which such a person always in its case attracts the attack upon that great popular leader made in the choicest of Henry Clay and later another one made by Daniel Webster, and I could put them side by side in parallel columns with the attacks that are today made upon Theodore Roosevelt, and you would not have to change a word. "Jackson," said Clay, just as the senator from Georgia and the senator from South Carolina say of the president, "is usurping all the prerogatives of the legislative department." "Jackson," they declared, "is ruining American liberty." "Jackson," they said, "is paving the way for a dictatorship and will ultimately seat himself upon the throne of kingly power."

Then we come to Lincoln. Lincoln! What was the familiar name applied to him, who, his critics said, overrode the constitution and who, his maligners declared, was destroying the personal liberty of the American people in trying to strike the shackles from the black slaves and to save the Union intact and unimpaired? The word, with its malignant echoes, still lingers in the atmosphere. "Tyrant" was the title that they placed upon the breast of the great martyr, and finally, when Booth struck him down, the words upon the lips of the assassins were, "Sic semper tyrannis" ("So be it to tyrants").

So, Mr. President, in these latter days and feeble attacks upon Theodore Roosevelt we have seen no new spectacle. We are beholding no new drama. It is not an original production. Because you are calling student rhetoric when they denounce that great man, who gathers into his breast the thoughts, the purposes, the hopes, the righteousness and aspirations of the American people—Theodore Roosevelt. All your speeches, sentiments, have been made before—against Washington, against your own great leader, Jackson, and against Lincoln, that greatest human but not one unstained man ever known. Mr. President, this is an old story. There is no veteran senator here who has not heard it with his own ears.

But if we want to come to an actual, if we really wish to discuss kinship and unkemptness, the senator's own side furnishes an example of both, and a recent institution furnishes that example. If there has ever been an intellectual tyrant, if there has ever been an autocrat of will, it is he who twice was the senator's candidate for president and twice defeated and who again to be the senator's candidate for president and again defeated—"the peerless one," William Jennings Bryan. He insists nothing in his opinions, even when events have proved him wrong. He announced himself in favor of free silver coinage at the ratio of 16 to 1 without the consent of any other nation in the world, and, although this country and the whole earth have long since passed that delusive episode in economics, still the senator's leader clings to it with the stubbornness of a moral monstrosity, but with the toxicity of mistaken fanaticism.

Picture the cabinet, Mr. President, if the senator from South Carolina could have his wish—Mr. Bryan, president; Caldwell, secretary of the treasury; Benjamin R. Tillman of South Carolina, attorney general, George Fred Williams of Massachusetts, secretary of war and secretary of state, anybody who would take the job, with nothing to do. Motto of the administration, "Pull down Louisiana at home and spit down the flag abroad." Because that is the sum and substance of the platform of "the peerless one" as recently announced in Nebraska, to which the senator subscribes.

Well, Mr. President, the country will have to face no such catastrophe. No, they will continue marching forward under Republican leadership upon that ever ascending path of wisdom, honesty and righteousness which Theodore Roosevelt has marked out for them, and, marching on, they will march to victory. The senator must postpone his prophecy for at least twelve years.

After Nature.

An innocent old couple went down to look at the leviathan steamship. It was their first view of a great steamship. She was clustered round with numerous tugs and small boats. After gazing in wonder for many minutes, the wife remarked: "Sh, it's the same everywhere. Everything after nature. It can't be helped. There be the mother and all the little ones."

Love's Reminders.

I know I'm not the only girl you ever loved. But don't tell me about the others.

DESERVES TO TRIUMPH.

Why the Republican Party Should Again Be Successful in 1904.

By Hon. E. H. HINSHAW, member of congress from Nebraska.

The Republican party is entitled to an emphatic indorsement at the polls in this session of the splendid record made by that party and its predecessor since 1897. There has not been in the history of the world a period of greater prosperity and industrial progress than is comprised within the last ten years of the history of this republic. In all matters pertaining to the regulation of interstate carriers especially has the tendency been distinctly progressive.

The record of the Fifty-ninth congress exceeds it in does not surpass the work of any preceding congress. It was predominantly a congress of constructive statesmanship. The policies three inaugurated entitle the party to a continuance of public favor. The record of President Roosevelt stands alone, and he typifies the aspirations of the common people of this country. "They will tolerate no backward step and will insist upon a continuation of his policies. The world moves, and woe be unto that man or set of men who attempt to check its progress.

With any leader who exemplifies and in good faith intends to carry forward the policies outlined by the president and put into legislation by the congress the Republican party deserves to win and in my judgment the good sober common sense of the American people will declare that the Republican party is entitled to control and direct the destinies of this country.

The Farmer and Home Market.

The total production last year of all our farms, of all our factories, of all our mines and of all our forests reached $25,000,000,000 in value. Our total exports were worth $1,750,000,000. Our total imports were worth $1,250,000,000, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of $500,000,000. Gentlemen, this means that the total value of the American market was worth $25,000,000,000. The total value of the international commerce of all the nations of the world last year was $20,000,000,000. This great American market of ours, that has grown up under the Dingley tariff, was worth $5,000,000,000 in excess of the entire international commerce of the world. Is it any wonder that the farmer is prosperous when he has such a market as this to which to sell his goods? And I want to say to my friends on the other side of the house that the farmers of the west are interested in a reduction of the tariff. Yes, we are in favor of a revision of the tariff, but when that tariff is revised I want to say to you that the farmers of the country are going to see to it that the party in power that will revise it shall protective lines. The farmer will insist that this great home market shall be kept inviolate.—Congressman Pollard of Nebraska.

We Want Things Cheaper Still.

"The precious," writes Henry Cabey Billed to the Manufacturer of Philadelphia, "that some schedules of the tariff have gone out of date is precisely the reason why they should be maintained. Under them, schedules domestic competition has enabled the manufacturer, dealer of finished commodities to improve his processes to such an extent that he surpasses the world in cheapness. Therefore from time to time, as he is able, he will use his new processes to beat and furnish his goods in competition with the world, and especially with Germany and England, cheaper and better than the foreign dealer, either or to cut them down in either blind, or criminal selfishness, a desire to enable the foreigner more sharply to compete with the American producer. Some years ago it was stated in some Philadelphia quarters that, the Dingley bill being in export sense in all the world, the duties should be reduced. I contributed an article to the contrary, to show that the time has gone by when why the duty should not be reduced, because we wanted the Dingley to furnish us sales still cheaper. This brought a letter from the Dingley bill thanking me for the article."

Will Be Properly Revised.

It is the policy and custom of the Republican party to give the subject attention to the duty at hand—to understand the time and the place. It will not undertook the duty of tariff revision in time way after the enemies of protection and wants unprotected by duties, begin the cry of "let the Dingley bill alone." Let the Dingley bill alone! Why? That was a tariff revision by the friends of protection. Having disposed of other large matters to the satisfaction of the people in the Republican platform, the friends will again, after the election of 1904 and the inauguration of the new president, address themselves to a revision of the tariff under such circumstances that it will be unmolested of any outcry of such a character as that which we now hear.—Pittsburg Gazette-Times (Rep.).

The Democratic Panic.

You say that it is a Republican panic because we said that the panic of 1893 was a Democratic panic? Just there is no analogy between the present panic and the panic of 1893. That panic came in with a Democratic administration, started with a Democratic administration and went out with a Democratic administration.—Congressman Dalzell.

Tariff Revision.

There seems to be a superfluous of a disposition all around to hurry along and catch up with Vice President Fairbanks' scheme for an early revision of the tariff. It has taken admirably well fixes the earliest date that is practicable.—Philadelphia Press.

The Democratic glee over the hard times is very apparent. Only through adversity can the Democracy be successful.

Fast Enough.

The discovery has been made that the world does not revolve with the frame monsoons it did a thousand years ago, but it still swings round fast enough to satisfy the man with a bill coming due.

Ivy's Strength.

An ivy plant which established itself in a crevice of the tower of St. John the Baptist church at Yarnbrough, England, undermined the foundation and lifted stones out of place until it will cost $1,000 to make repairs.

Saccharin is a white crystalline compound from tolulene, a constituent of coal tar. It is 300 times sweeter than cane sugar and finds use as a sweetening agent, especially for persons who cannot use sugar, owing to disease, such as diabetes. Woman's Chief Weapon.

Woman, having no other means at her disposal for vanquishing, kill, attracting men to her charms wherein has for many long centuries had to rely entirely on coquetry, it is not an unnatural development that this weapon is deeply incrusted in the feminine nature, and that it should be instinct at once conscious and involuntary—and that it now constitutes one of woman's most fundamental characteristics.—The Grand Magazine.

SKYSCRAPERS OF ROME.

Ancient Regulations Regarding the Height of Buildings.

"The skyscraper is no modern invention," says a St. Louis architect who read in the history of his profession, "in all the ancient cities where brick or stone was available high houses within the walls of the city were very numerous because of the lack of ground space for building.

"In the days of Augustus the tenement houses of Rome became so high as to be dangerous, and laws were passed condemning a number of tenement rows and ordering them to be taken down, while at the same time a law was enacted limiting the height of all future tenements to a hundred feet. For palaces and public buildings there was no limit.

"After the burning of the city in Nero's time the streets, which before were no wider than our alleys, were made broader. Some of them through the business part of the city were forty feet wide, and some of the great thoroughfares were sixty.

"The tenement height was lowered to eighty feet, and as a consequence the city spread far beyond its walls. The average height of a ceiling in a Roman tenement was a little over five feet. The windows were open holes in the wall, shaped to exclude weather with board shutters. So the worst modern tenement is a palace compared with the skyscraper home of the poor when the empire was at its best."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE KOOKABURRA.

Australia's Laughing Bird and Its Startling Cry.

To the outside world the greatest oddity of bird life in Australia is the kookaburra. Though Australians take little notice of it except occasionally in a hostile way, its cachinnation appeals irresistibly to the newcomer. Like the laughing of a female, it begins with the mopsies. It is a conspicuous figure in the account of a typical bush home and therefore too common to be worthy of notice. In earlier times it was known as the "settler's clock" from a belief that its joyful paeans were rendered regularly at sunrise and sunset, being quiescent through the heat of the intervening time, and silent after noon. That belief has long been shattered. The kookaburra laughs just when the fit takes it, particularly when excited, and it takes on readily at the violent death of its mother-in-law as it does at the enraged settler when he falls off his haystack. A wounded bird makes a demoniacal row, which will bring all others within hearing into the neighboring trees, and these at once set up an echoing cackle that is repeated again and again.

The kookaburra is also known as the laughing jackass and the laughing jackass—Sydney (Australia) Times.

Why Negroes Like Watermelons.

The humorists always associate the African with the watermelon, assuming that the taste of the colored man for his favorite dainty arises from his life in the southern states, where the melon vine grows like a weed. As a fact, however, the African taste for the melon is of very ancient breeding. The vine is native of Africa, where it is found wild in the great central plains of the continent, and has also been cultivated for many ages. In Egypt the melon grows along the Nile river for those of southeastern Missouri. The melons mentioned by the Israelites as being among the good things they had in Egypt were undoubtedly watermelons, for in the wall paintings about the time of the order the melon vine is represented, and in one case a long procession of slaves is depicted, each bearing on his shoulder a huge, dark green watermelon.—Washington Herald.

Pulling the Eagle's Tail.

I know an Indian, Yellow Eagle, who in order to get his coup feather dug a hole in the ground on the open prairie far from camp or habitation. Over it he fixed a covering of brush, upon which he placed the carcass of a freshly slain antelope. In this trap he lay for three days awaiting the eagles' coming. When at last, lured by the bait, one did alight he seized it from below, and despite its flapping and clawing and pecking he plucked the precious feathers before freeing the astonished and terrified bird. I recall now but the American Indian's who has been able successfully to pull the American eagle's tail.—Army and Navy Life.

Ice Explosions in Siberia.

A Siberian traveler relates: "At Balaiun in the Irkutsk district lakes the absence was sometimes broken by a loud report as of a cannon. This was the bursting of one of the ice bubbles in the river, a phenomenon I had neither heard nor read of before. The streams coming down from the hills were frozen at the surface some six to nine inches thick. The water beneath flowed faster than it could escape, and the pressure, on the principle of a hydraulic press, became irresistible. First the elasticity of the ice was seen by the rising of circular mounds from six to eight feet in diameter and from four or five feet high. The bursting point came at last with a report like an explosion. The water escaped, but some frozen rights. I have seen scores of these ice hillocks in a few versts of the river."

A Strange Test of Manhood.

The ancient one Manhood used to exercise a stranger test to prove the manhood of their children. At Dunvegan castle, island of Skye, there is preserved the large horn known as "Hory More's horn." Into the capacious vessel holds rather more than a bottle and a half of Hollands. According to the old custom, every laird of Macleod was obliged on the coming of age to fill this horn with claret and without once laying it down to drain it to the dregs. This was taken as a proof of his manhood, and he was then deemed a worthy successor to the laird of the past.—Dundee Advertiser.

Fire at Weddings.

Fire is an essential in some wedding ceremonies. In Persia the service is rent in front of a fire. In Nicaragua the priest, taking the couple each by the little finger, leads them to an apartment where a fire is lighted and then instructs the bride in her duties, exhaustingly if by way of conclusion, in Japan the wedding takes place at home and the bridegroom lights the fire, the plighting of the wife being burnt then and there.

Nervous Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has no power to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores nervous energy and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

"For many years I was an acute sufferer from nervous indigestion. Three I was so despondent life seemed almost a burden. I tried all kinds of remedies and various physicians with little or no relief. Finally, eight months ago I began using Dr. Miles' Nervine and Nerve Pills. Continuing the treatment I make one truly that which I did in months before I was able to do in years. The use of Heart Cure, in a few days I began to feel better, which encouraged me so much that I continued the medicine until I had taken more than twelve bottles. FIVE DIVORCES HER LIMIT.

Court Gives Decree to Women, but Won't Let Her Marry Again.

Because it is to the interest of the public that the shams in marriage have the right to remarry, Mrs. Hannah Begin of Minneapolis, five time married and five times divorced, champion cross widow of Minnesota, has pronounced the end of her matrimonial rope. In an order just filed Judge Brooks of the Hennepin county District Court granted Mrs. Begin a divorce from husband Nelson, and the divorcee is denied and the right to remarry is denied the woman. In his findings, Judge Brooks holds that a decree of limited divorce will meet Mrs. Begin's case, and that she would require from an absolute separation. "except only the right to marry, the further exercise of which," says Judge Brooks, "would not be likely to prove beneficial to either for or the public." Mrs. Begin is 42 years old, and did not begin her matrimonial career until she was 20 years old. In which period she has been married five times, and in fourteen years she has been divorced five times.

CLEVELAND SERVICES SIMPLE.

Borrowing Friends Follow Ex-President's Body to the Grave.

It was a distinguished company that silently watched as the body of Grover Cleveland was lowered into the grave in the Princeton, N. J., cemetery. The simple burial service of the Presbyterian church was then read, and before the last of the carriages in the cortege had drawn up to the gate leading to the burial place the benediction had been pronounced and the members of the family, President Roosevelt and others who had gathered about the grave, were leaving the cemetery. Many friends of the dead statesman lingered about the spot which was to mark his last resting place, and each in turn was permitted to cast a shovel-ful of earth into the grave.

Without the funeral was of a strictly private nature, those in attendance numbered many distinguished citizens and included President Roosevelt, Governor Foster of New Jersey, Governor Hughes of New York, Governor Stokes of Georgia, former members of Cleveland's cabinet, officials of the Equitable Life Assurance society, members of the Princeton university faculty and friends and neighbors.

Mr. Cleveland was buried with all the simplicity and privacy that he himself might have wished, and the public citizen rather than as the former chief executive of the nation. There was nothing that savored of the official, and the military element was injected solely as a measure of precaution in protecting President Roosevelt.

For over an hour before the services had until President Roosevelt had left the Cleveland home, the streets and cemetery were carefully guarded by units of soldiers and police. Some 4000 the grave was filled the cemetery was opened to the public, and the crowd surged into the grounds to view the grave and floral display.

Fell to Sea the Florida.

Continuing the most novel experiment with the old monitor Florida as the object of attacks in the process of three cabinet officers and many naval officers, a whitehead torpedo was fired into the vessel near Norfolk, Va. The torpedo, containing 220 pounds of gun cotton, by the Florida amidships and caused her to reel, while water spouted up around her high in the air from the force of the explosion. Fragments of steel torn from the side of the vessel were hurled far around, some falling half a mile distant. Commander Brady and his officers, who were watching from Admiral Osgoe, chief constructor of the navy, were aboard the Florida when the explosion occurred, and immediately thereafter Secretary Taft, Secretary Metcalf and Postmaster General Meyer joined them to witness the inspection. It had been expected by some that the vessel would sink, and boats were in hand for the rescue of those on board. The only fear was that she would be towed out to the navy yard to be placed in drydock for repairs. They were found that the bottom of the vessel's side had been driven for about 100 feet and torn quite severely in places. Number of the boilers were damaged. Fifteen men could get through the hole at once, but the double bottom saved the ship from sinking. Admiral Osgoe said the damage done will compare favorably with the damage done to the vessel after the Spanish war, when the climate bringing out the disease that has been fatal to him and resident inactive by medicine. DENVER WIDE OPEN FOR THE CONVENTION

"Queen City of the Plains" Arranges to Give Political Visitors a Good Time.

BELL IS CHOSEN CHAIRMAN.

Democratic National Committee Confirms Bryan's Choice for Temporary Presiding Officer.

Denver correspondence:

A week in advance of the event Denver began filling up with visitors to the Democratic National Convention. Politicians and newspaper men gathered in large numbers to make place for their respective delegations and journals, engaging quarters, reserving seats and seeing that wire accommodations are amply prepared.

The Denver merchants, through the board of trade, planned elaborate entertainments for all who might be within the city gates until long after the nomination of Democratic candidates, and the city's business men declared that no one word should go forth into the world derogatory of the city's care of its visitors.

Denver spent its efforts and energies, throwing its heart and soul in one grand advertising effort. Underlying all Denver's claims to excellence is a innovation which the managers planned to put out, and if you only long enough it gets out of your senses entirely.

Denver Ready.

Denver believes its convention arrangements have been so complete as those in the Auditorium for the Republican. Colonel John I. Martin of St. Louis, who has the management of arrangements, arrived a week in advance, coming early, he said, to prepare the hall and see that everything was ready in plenty of time. He found little to do in that line, and was free to plan the seating arrangements, ticket printing, and other details. Colonel Martin attended the Chicago convention, and said the Denver Auditorium was ahead of the arrangements there.

Water from the Mountains.

Colonel Martin and others interested in the preparations for the big convention said every possible convenience would be given the visitors. They declared that if any one could make a suggestion which had not been carried out during the convention he would be glad to get any cost to see that it was made. Colonel Martin said:

"We have spared no expense arrangements have been so complete as those in the Auditorium for the Republican. Colonel John I. COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL

NEW YORK.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: "Trade is quiet, but healthy in tone, and the past week sends moderate progress in the right direction, despite the interruption of business and political. Confidence in the future is evidenced in many ways, encouragement being derived from favorable crop reports and more conspicuous showing that June produced much better results than any month since the serious last October. This was particularly noticeable in the hardware trade, June being the first month of 1908 to show number habitual of commercial failures from the corresponding month last year.

"Manufacturing returns show the customary mid-year curtailment of activity for inventories and repairs, but resumption is expected to be prompt, and many plants started up on July 1 with a fair amount of business in sight, while others have orders for some adjustment in wage scales are not materializing, labor representing the necessity of concession in conformity with reductions of prices."

CHICAGO.

"Business generally enters upon the last half of the year under improving conditions which are more confident outlooks for future activity. Evidences more steady business, increasing consumption of products, and manufacturing devices contrast from the latter disorganized shows by railroads to incur important purchases. Mid-year interest payments avert transactions through the banks, but a good deal of commercial paper is added to current failures. Seasonable weather has enhanced values in agriculture and distribution, and there is assurance of further resumption at factories and railroad shops which will effect a reemployment of much idle labor. Sales in the leading retail stores have been in a gratifying aggregate. Wholesale markets are well stocked by buyers.

"Failures reported in the Chicago district number 126, against 92 last week and 76 a year ago. These with liabilities of more than $5,000 number 10, against 8 last week and 9 in 1907."

MEMORIES OF THE WAR

The first time I saw General Grant was through our headquarters field glasses from the Robert House tree on the James river, opposite Dutch Gap canal. This line across to Swift Creek and Fort Clifton on the Appomattox was held by Butler's division after the retaking of Resaca Hundred, which capture so pleased General Lee that he sent Pickett a complimentary acknowledgment of his service.

It was the summer of 1864. General Pickett and I were riding along the line, looking over at the Federal gunboats and monitors, and more than the guards from our headquarters, when suddenly I saw a puff of smoke drifting skyward, and a shell came whizzing by, bursting in front of us, and a piece of it glanced off from the stirrup, leaving a mere abrasion on the instep of my left foot. The shell had been lifted from the gun.

—Petoskey News: The steamer, "Chase S. Osborne," as she is known to Petoskey people, but really the "Cheboygan," arrived in port Friday afternoon after an extended cruise down Lake Michigan, as far as Benton Harbor and St. Joseph, Mich. When the steamer left Petoskey she was titled the "Chase S. Osborn," but on arriving at Grand Haven the inspectors raised a kick. It seems that when the boat was in the possession of Commodore Hamill, her hull was inspected under the name of the "Cheboygan," but the state game and fish department changed the name to that of the future game and fish warden. The inspectors would not allow this, so the name was changed back to "Cheboygan." The department have applied to the proper authorities to have the name the same as the boat was registered at launching. There is a lot of red tape connected with the change, so that it is probable that the boat will sail under the name of the northern Michigan city for some time.

Gov. Warner's Meeting.

Governor Warner and Lieut. Gov. Kelley were well received in Charlevoix Saturday. A good audience greeted the chief executive and his campaign partner.

The governor does not deny that he is out in his own interest, and wants the people to vote for him at the primaries for a third term.

We have not changed our opinion in the least regarding the inexpediency of granting the governor's request. Gov. Warner has been a clean, creditable governor, but we shall oppose him in the primary and favor the candidacy of Dr. Bradley, now Auditor General.

Dr. Bradley is one of the most capable officials in Michigan. He is an active candidate for governor, and comes into the field with a clean personal and official record.

NEXT week at the LAF-A-LOT Theatre Miss Dontia Sol & Co. will entertain the audiences with a musical comedy. She is the girl with many faces.

YOUR "UNCLE JOE."

The Speaker of the American House of Commons in Charlevoix.

"Uncle Joe" Cannon, the great American "stand patter," but distinguished as the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, was in Charlevoix Sunday. As a matter of fact he was here last Thursday on a Detroit yacht, bound for Mackinac.

Sunday afternoon an officer on the Manitou gave the Sentinel scribe a tip that Uncle Joe was on board, and at a certain quiet spot on the upper deck.

The aforesaid scribe found him at the port rail chewing a big black cigar and expectorating into Round Lake. He was attired in a conventional black suit. The otherwise immaculate white shirt front had just two oval blotches of tobacco juice stains, while the broadcloth vest was generously littered with cigar ashes. There was a chap just to our left who was very impertinent with his eyes. He may have been the Speaker's private secretary, or he may have been a secret service man lent out by Teddy to guard the great representative of the popular branch of the American congress.

"Uncle Joe" was courteous to the scribe, but it was after the manner of Uncle Joe. His response to the scribe's greeting was unique, and displayed just a suggestion of suspicion that beneath the smiling, innocent countenance the the country editor there lurked an incipient newspaper dragon.

Ejecting the remains of a badly mutilated cigar from the north, into Round Lake, the Speaker sized up the scribe as he would a new member of congress from Posey county, Ind., who applies for an appointment on the ways and means committee.

The ice once broken Uncle Joe limbered up and at once began inquiring what congressional district this was, and who was the congressman; where was Loud's district, and what about this Fordney business; would this district return a republican congressman, and did we think there was any danger of a break in the republican delegation up this way?

Then the scribe told him about the governor having been here the day before, and he piled the scribe with questions concerning the gubernatorial situation. Did Michigan elect a governor for one year or two? What would be the result of the contest?

The scribe was just about to sail into the Speaker along more general and important political lines, when we saw Capt. Billy Finucan mounting the bridge and with Uncle Joe's cordial handshake and good wishes, the scribe left the strenuous Speaker biting the end of a fresh cigar and gazing toward the railroad bridge with a look of authority that seemed to command that structure to rise from its foundation and address the chair.

"Better Roads" if not "Good Roads."

From the Traverse City Eagle:

The June issue of Motor Talk, a magazine of outdoor sports, is a "Better Roads Number." In giving it that name the editor makes the point that even if we cannot have "good roads" as many would like to have us have, we can have better roads. And it is for the purpose of stimulating interest in the matter of highway improvement that the June issue is devoted to the road subject.

On one of the pages of the magazine is a picture of a toll-gate. An auto is just at the gate and the gatekeeper has come out of his house to collect the toll. The picture furnishes food for reflection. It calls to our attention the fact that the time is near at hand when a considerable part of the traffic over our country roads will be by automobiles; its reminds us that according to our present road building system the auto owners living in the cities and incorporated villages contribute practically nothing for the building or repairing of country roads; it also causes us to remember that many of the good roads formerly to be found in southern Michigan were kept in repair by toll collected from the persons who actually used them.

We must have better roads in this Grand Traverse region. We need them for the purpose of hauling produce to market; we need them that our summer visitors may be shown the country by means of autos. It would be an impossible task to ask the farmers and residents of unincorporated villages to build these roads and to keep them in repair. We hardly want to return to the old toll gate plan. About the only plan left us is that known as the county system, the adoption of which plan is being agitated at the present time.

With the county road system a tax is levied on all the property in the county and the money realized is used to build main roads through the county districts. The system insures a continuous and consistent road policy instead of a haphazard way of patching up a piece of road here one year and a piece there the next year. If the people of Grand Traverse county adopt the county road system as it is to be hoped that they will, the taxpayers of Traverse City will have to pay fully as much toward building the country roads as the people living in the country. This is perfectly fair, however, for the time is near at hand when the city people will their autos will use these country roads fully as much as the farmers

They will appear at the M. E. church on Sunday and Monday evening, July 26th and 27th, in an entertainment that will be very pleasing. This is all of a most worthy cause, and we hope our people will generously respond.

The United States Lake Survey steamer Col. J. L. Lusk, which has been sweeping the Manitou Passage, where the steamer Gary was damaged last season, reports the discovery of a boulder ridge, showing at the present high stage of Lake Michigan, 20½ feet, and at standard low water not more than 17½ feet.

It lies directly on the sailing course passing Sleeping Bear Point, is one mile off shore, and 6¾ miles away in a direction where true azimuth is 178 degrees (S. 3-16 E.) from South Manitou Island lighthouse.

From the shoal the center of the lookout building of the life-saving station on Sleeping Bear Point is 2:15 miles away, and is degrees 15 minutes true azimuth (S. N. E. 11-16 E.) North end of Hoglack is one mile away, true azimuth 112 degrees 40 minutes (E. S. E.).

Masters, in passing Sleeping Bear Point, should keep from 1¼ to 2 miles off shore. The discovery of this obstruction will necessitate the changing of the sailing course on all lake survey charts showing this area.

The "Col. Lusk" is now engaged in sweeping operations outside the gas buoy, off the south end of North Manitou Island. A row of spar buoys, displaying flags and showing brush tops, have been set for sweeping purposes, and masters are requested to assist the work to the extent of keeping a sharp lookout to avoid running these buoys, and to give the survey steamer and sweep right of way. Steamers may pass over the sweep wire in the 100 foot space between any two copper floats.

Covell in Gratiot Co.

Alma Journal: If there is any person in Alma who now doubts the popularity of the candidacy of Geo. G. Covell of Traverse City, who is seeking the nomination for congressman from the 11th district at the primaries next September, that person is yet to be heard from since the meeting held in the city hall last Tuesday night. For some time it has been freely stated by several of the supporters of Frank P. Doods, the opponent of Mr. Covell in this race, that Gratiot county was overwhelmingly in favor of the Mr. Pleasant man and that very little Covell sentiment was in evidence. Believing that a good plan to test that sentiment would be to endeavor to organize a Covell club, a few of the Traverse City man's friends started such a movement last week with the result that when the meeting was called to order Tuesday night a total of 214 persons appeared upon the enrollment, all being voters in the city of Alma. Judging from that and the enthusiastic demonstration for the man from Traverse City the name of the district as he was greeted upon his arrival to attend the meeting, it would seem that at least in the 11th district we are turning and there is very little Dodd's sentiment.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Eagle: The surrounding plains were covered with huckleberry pickers yesterday and all returned with; berries, as they are very plentiful this year. One family returned with 10 crates as a result of their day's work. The berries are large and being plentiful fill pails very rapidly. They are far above the average yield in both quantity and quality.

Traverse City Eagle: The cornerstone of the First National bank building now being erected in Traverse City will be laid Thursday afternoon, July 30, at 2 o'clock. The ceremony will be performed by the Grand Lodge Free and Accepted Masons of Michigan at the request of the masonic Traverse City lodge No. 222 and lodges from several of the nearby towns. The Grand Lodge officers will come to Traverse City from Bangor, where they lay a cornerstone on the 20th of July, and will go from Traverse City to Harbor Springs, where another stone will be laid on the 31st inst.

DONTIA SOL & CO. will appear on the bill at the LAF-a-lot Theatre next week. They are beautiful singers and Miss Sol besides being pretty and attractive, has a beautiful voice. The act is original and unique as Miss Sol is quite comical, funny and she is ably assisted by her partner who is also a fine vocalist.

COVELL GAINING

Conditions Point to An Overwhelming Majority For Northern Michigan Candidate.

From the Traverse City Record:

There is a strong sentiment growing throughout the Eleventh congressional district in favor of Geo. G Covell for the congressional nomination. Mr. Covell was a candidate two years ago against Congressman A. B. Darragh, and was defeated at the primaries. The time then was not ripe for Mr. Covell inasmuch as a large number of office holders were under obligations to Mr. Darragh, and many of the newspapers of the district were similarly obligated. This condition has been changed, however, and a great many strong influences having discharged their moral and political obligations to the former congressman are free to express themselves and vote for their choice for congressman. That this choice with a large number who favored Mr Darragh two years ago will now fall upon Mr. Covell is already favorably demonstrated.

C. W. La Du, editor of the Crystal Mail, one of the leading papers in Montcalm county, arrived in the city Saturday and spent Sunday at Park Place. Mr. La Du was very conservative two years ago in his estimate of Mr. Covell's prospects. He is still conservative, but his conversation reveals the sentiment in Montcalm county in favor of Mr. Covell.

Mr. La Du is very well known and thoroughly acquainted through the eastern tier of counties in this district, especially in Montcalm county. In discussing the matter with The Evening Record this morning Mr. La Du said:

"Where there was considerable opposition two years ago, there is now thoroughly crystallizing a very favorable sentiment for Mr. Covell. Where there was a spirited contest two years ago, this year there will be practically no opposition. The postmaster of the county and largely throughout the district were against Mr. Covell in every case. Two years ago you could not get any of the old soldiers away from Mr. Darragh's support. This year scores of veterans who favored Mr. Darragh are now talking and working in Mr. Covell's cause, and the large majority feel very favorable toward his candidacy. Conspicuous among the workers are those who worked against him during the last congressional campaign. Many of the old soldiers and practically all of the office holders who favored Mr. Darragh two years ago feel that their obligations have been discharged. This is true in nearly all of the townships of Montcalm county. Out of 12 newspapers published in the county, 10 of them are supporting Mr. Covell. The Coral News and Stanton Clipper are favoring Mr. Covell's opponent.

"The present outlook indicates that the vote in Montcalm county will be three to one in favor of Geo. G. Covell, which would mean that Mr. Covell's majority will reach very close to 1,500 in that county alone."

The sentiment expressed by Mr. La Du is echoed throughout Montcalm county. The Edson Times of April 17th said editorially, "It is conceded now that Hon. G. G. Covell's majority for congress in Montcalm county will exceed 1,500 or 2,000 votes."

The expressions of Mr. La Du and others who are in a position to form a correct opinion are a very strong indication of Mr. Covell's prospects at the September primaries, and it is confidently believed by those who are in touch with the people of the district that Mr. Covell will be the next congressman from the Eleventh Congressional District.

The tugs have all quit fishing for a few weeks, and are making preparations for the fall catch.

H. F. Patterson, representing the State board of underwriters, was here last week making a plat of the city.

Mr. D. C. Gallagher and T. J. Bonner are attending a convention of the I. L. M & T. A. at Erie, Pa., this week.

The Misses Boereske and Bush, of Racine, Wis., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Hartwig, a few days last week.

Capt. James Gordon, who has had the tug Pup chartered returned with her to Charlevoix last week. He is now putting the tug Badger into shape for fall fishing.

The old ice house a familiar landmark on the point, and site of Mr. John Day's business career here on the island, which has withstood the ravages of the elements for over a quarter of a century collapsed in the storm of last week.

Bishop Richter, of Grand Rapids, arrived here Friday noon, and was escorted to the church by the A. O. H. of this place. On Saturday morning the Bishop, with a large concourse of citizens boarded the steamer McCann and proceeded to High Island where High Mass was celebrated, after which the dedication of the new church took place. Sunday morning during High Mass the Bishop gave confirmation to a class of about fifty, among which were three converts. In the afternoon Vincent Bros. launch accompanied by six additional gasoline boats each carrying its quota passengers escorted his "Excellence" to Garden Island, where different points of interest were visited including the Indian Cemetery and the ruins of the old church erected on the island over a century ago. On arriving at the dock the Bishop was both surprised and pleased to see the preparations that were made in honor of his visit. At the outer end of the dock the Indians under the supervision of Mr. John Vincent had erected a large arch of evergreens trimmed with wreaths of different variety of flowers. At the foot of the dock the party encountered a similar arch, and so on at regular intervals until the cemetery was reached, a distance of about one half mile. The dock between the two arches was strewn with wild flowers, which grow in abundance throughout the entire island. Truly the island has been rightly named for it is a veritable garden. Nature seems to have endowed this more than its share of beautiful scenery, and we do not think it would be exaggerating matters too much in saying that the Michigan archipelago does not present a more ideal place for a day's outing. Yesterday a good day land locked harbor with water enough to float the largest boat on the lakes, we ventured to predict that the day is not far distant when the choice of this beautiful harbor will be lined with summer cottages. The Bishop and party spent a very delightful afternoon on this island returning to Beaver island in the evening.

"Drowning a desperate slave around, the chauffeur stiffened hastily into the deepest shadow of the beech tree, and there awaited the diplomat's uncertain advance, his mind working with preternatural swiftness. It was just possible that in this friendly darkness he might pass unrecognized—if he could keep silent. How fortunate that the count was such a talker!

"He could think, chased each other through his brain while Sherrard was shielding his wounds by the beech.

"I can hardly see you in this infernal darkness," he boomed. "Moderior Mon Chaut! What good luck! Come, let us sit down, telling the action to the word, 'and talk. I'm all impatience to hear everything about yourself—which he proved by launching forth immediately into a prodigious relative of his own, just as the other had shrewdly suspected that he would—Doctor Sonnerolf, like all great men, being only too delighted to talk about himself continually, planned to talk, and in this instance a listener was most inevitably produced.

"As I was saying, I had just finished having Gustavo his history up to date, the count resumed his long sociably and, thrusting a cigar into his mouth, prepared for a prolonged monologue, when, as I was in Monte Carlo, I was having a most interesting adventure, working a match at this point, he held it daintily between fat and thumb and turned his twinkling glance on the face which the man means to be fully covered.

For a long moment there was silence while the two looked into each other's eyes, and the chauffeur felt that never minutes unlike each other could be heard in the pants of the motor creeping close to the premises, and the rustling of the wind, lowed, lower down, and finally, in a low, cautious voice, he said not even detected the count's glance.

"That I had sudden inspiration had taken him completely by surprise. His Sorrowful discovered him!

"I replied with anxious impatience, harm lessened the other finishing again in his pockets. Ah! there was no doubt about it. The count had not been enough to subject, now he was going to make sure. There was a quick, intuitive, flash

"But the second watch was never light out.

How often, when her victim is at his least easy, Fortune changes the tide! Just as the diplomat's hurried, nervous fingers opened to the little silver box, the hands, the sound of footsteps approaching the shadow, coming over gravel and twigs.

"Count Sourzelief!" came in command ing tones. "A moment, if you please." It was the voice of the Russian ambassador.

With a smothered exclamation, his attache sprang to his feet and pushed aside the intervening beech branches. "At your Excellency!" he said, and then, turning back to the count, he urged "I will be back directly. Just wait an instant, Del Pino."

It is perhaps hardly necessary to mention that Del Pino did not wait. The diplomats were barely out of sight, when with a couple of strides, he was standing by Mrs. Waring's chair, leaning down into a tete with smart ceremony.

"Can you come now?" he asked, speaking in low, hurried tones that only reached her ear. "I feel as if I had been waiting for a very long time."

So Bid Gamble—to tell the truth, "Yes, I will have to be going now, she said, rising without hesitation. Then, to her host, "Wont you be so good as to call a cab? asked in a whisper; "I don't want to break up the party!

And, leaving the Senator with a slight nod, Mrs. Waring and her chauffeur disappeared into the darkness.

Five minutes later two attaches, standing on the little bridge that leads from Cherry Chase Inn House to the main road, saw an automobile glide out of the motor shed at the back. As it shot past, with a muffled chug-chug, "There he is!" said one of the men excitedly. "Look, Sourzeiff! Did you see it? Did you see light?"

But the count had turned on his heel and was walking down the steps as fast as his legs could carry him.

"Come on!" he cried. "Help me get my senses! My nature's fairly more than his I am going to give him a chase!"

CHAPTER XII.

"Aren't we going faster than the law allows?" Mrs. Waring asked presently.

She was sitting upright, clasping the seat with both hands and straining her eyes through a dim, enclosing swirl of fog and darkness.

"The law?" ejaculated her companion sharply. He glanced over his shoulder and then, in parenthesis, half-aloud. "No—I don't know! I acknowledge."

Seizing the emergency brake at this moment, he jammed it down, bringing the blinding motor to a stand still just as a friendly moon peeped in its darkness, turning miraculously into a crowded trolley car, loaded with tourists, who leaned out curious.

"A close shave!" ejaculated the chauffeur under his breath, as he let his clutch, chime out recklessly on the long road, among with twinkling lights which annoyed with lurk black stretches. For more minutes nothing could be heard but the pants of the motor creeping close to the premises, and the rustling of the wind, lowed, lower down, and finally, in a low, cautious voice, he said not even detected the count's glance.

"That had sudden inspiration had taken him completely by surprise. His Sorrowful discovered him!

MEXICO CITY POLICE.

Street Lanterns That Keep Them Vigilant at Night.

"When I visited Mexico," said an artist, "I found innumerable things original, but there which gained my notice particularly was the police system. In the city of Mexico the policemen are stationed at short intervals apart in the street. Each policeman has a lantern, which is placed on a stand in the center of the street. It is the duty to remain in easy striking distance of this lantern at all times, so that he will be on hand in case of an emergency.

"Any person who is able to reach the lamp and lift it from its hook before the policeman interferes is entitled to a reward of $500. Any policeman who loses his lantern is subject to strict and dishonorable dismissal. This is to insure constant vigilance on their part and to require their presence at a certain point at all times. At first I regarded the thing as a joke, and I tried to get possession of the police lantern. But then I found that I was greatly mistaken. Not once, although I exercised extreme caution, was I quick enough for the policeman on watch.

A SUICIDE'S HAND.

The Queer Superstition That Used to Prevail in England.

In former times it was a common notion that if a sick person could only touch the hand of a suicide he or she would be cured. This superstition was especially common in the west of England. In Cornwall touching a suicide's hand was said to have once cured a young man who had been afflicted with many tumors from his birth. A similar superstition regarding the touch of executed criminals has been widely prevalent and has often been recorded. Robert Hunt in his "Romances of the West of England" says that he once saw a young woman led on to the scaffold at Newgate in order to have a wen touched by the hand of a man who had just been executed.

At Northampton of old the hangman is said to have had a regular fee for receiving a similar "privilege" in safety from the diseases. Even the coffin of a suicide may have curative virtue. There is a Devonshire belief to the effect that if any one suffering from disease can manage to throw a white handkerchief on such a coffin at the time of its interment the disease will vanish as the handkerchief decays. Much superstitious value has also been attached to the knots of the rope used either for a suicide or in the execution of a criminal.

Work of the Farmer.

The countless millions of our population are fed and clothed by the American farmer. The grain waving in golden luxury upon the great plains of the west, the cotton drifting like snow over acres upon the fields of the south, freight the decks of nations and loom their mills, thread the continents with track of steel, fill the earth with the roar of trains and hoop for trade and commerce and useful art those stores that make a nation great. Where are the sinews of our strength? If they are not found in our great, diversified agricultural products? What statesman boasts ever waved as joyous honors as time has that first shove the tangled mains from the shores of Maine to the spicy grasses of California? What spirit of loyalty throws since southern lands when theory lands uncover to crown "King Cotton?"—Hon. Eugene N. Ganther, Ex. of Mississippi in House of Representatives.

A Mole Catcher.

A farm manager at Fordberty, Dingwall, Scotland, watching a mole-catcher at work, saw the man hovering over and occasionally alighting upon a turnip field in which the observer and others were at work. A particularly keen and unusuous bird attracted his attention by the graceful way it hushed slowly over the drills, intently scanning the surface of the ground. Suddenly, stealthily Fordberty a moment. It dropped, dug its bill into the bewitching ground and now with a mole for its prey. Resting a few minutes, it graceefully began again a further search for food. In a few minutes a second mole was unearthed.

The White Evening Waistcoat.

Anything that breaks through the glossy, funereal, waterproof aspect of male evening dress is to be commended. But pretty silly, as a general rule, the white evening waistcoat cannot be effectively worn much after the age of twenty-one. Black, it is well known, diminishes the proportions, but white undoubtedly increases them. I personally know I have hitherto considered to be slim appear in white evening waistcoats and look shockingly corpulent.—London Graphic.

After Nature.

An innocent old couple went down to look at the leviathan steamship. It was their first visit to a steamship. She was clustered round with numerous tugs and small boats. After gazing in wonder for many minutes, the wife remarked: "Sh, it's the same everywhere. Everything after nature. It won't be be long. There be the mother and all the little ones."

MAY FIRES.

Ancient Scotch Custom Which Involved Human Sacrifice.

Sir John Sinclair's "Statistical Account of Scotland" contains notices of many old customs, which still continued to be observed in the Highlands, though they were even then fast fading out. From the descent, volume of the great work, which was published in 1791 and 1792, we extract the following, on the authority of the minister of Colquhoun, Dumbartonshire, that the boys of the township assembled in a body upon the moors on May day and proceeded to dig a circular trench, leaving the soil in the center undisturbed, so as to form a low table of green turf sufficient in size to accommodate the whole party.

They lighted a fire and prepared a custard of milk and eggs and a bread-meal cake, which they baked upon a stone placed in the centers. When they had eaten the custard, they divided the cake into as many equal portions as there were persons in the ensemble and cushed one of these pieces with charcoal until it was perfectly black. They then placed all the pieces of coke together in a bonnet, and each in turn drew one indiscriminately, the unlucky bonnet being entitled to the last piece. The boy who drew the blackened portion was destined to be sacrificed and was compelled to leap three times through the flames.

Although the ceremony had degenerated into a mere pastime for boys, it is evident that it most once upon a time have involved the actual sacrifice of a human being in order to render the coming summer fruitful.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A QUICK TOUCH.

She Needed Money and Sent a Message That Would Fetch It.

A fay or two ago a woman entered a suburban telegraph office and handed to the receiver of messages that she desired to telegraph her husband, who was away in the country, to ask him for money. He pointed her to the counter with instructions to write and hot the rate for a dozen words. She struggled away for a quarter of an hour and then handed in the following lines:

"Won't you please send me $5 by best post?"

"I don't know whether that will do or not," she said as she felt for her purse, "if you were to receive such a telegram from your wife, would you forward the money?"

"Well—well, I might," he replied in doubtful tones.

"Now, you wait. I don't like the telegram at all, because I tried to keep it within twelve words. I'll write another."

She tore it up, walked over to the counter and in three minutes handed in a new one reading:

"Are out of food and just and want £5 as soon as you can get it here. If you can't spare it I'll pawn the parlor carpet."

"That would bring the money from me," said the counter clerk as he read the lines and marked the number of words.

"Then it will from him. Send it quick."—London Tit-Bits.

Investigating Grandpa.

A grandfather, well known in the English home of commerce, was enjoying amicably with his little granddaughter, who was snugly ensconced on his knee.

"What makes your hair so white, grandpa?" the little one queried.

"I am very old, my dear; I was in the ark," replied his lordship, with a painful disregard of the truth.

"Oh, you are Noah?"

"Yes."

"Are you Shem, Ham?"

"No, I am not Shem."

"Are you Ham?"

"No."

"Then," said the little one, who was fast nursing the limit of her limited knowledge, "you must be Japheth."

A negative reply was given to this query also, for the old gentleman was wardly wondered what the outcome would be.

"But, grandpa, if you are not Noah or Shem or Ham or Japheth you must be a lobster!"

The Evil Eye.

The "evil eye" was one of the many superstitions that at one time beset humanity in the time of the ignorance. It was believed throughout the middle ages that certain persons had the power of cursing you by their glances of unbelieving eye to the fascination which succeeded, blighted and destroyed you. Amulets of various forms were used against this much dreaded power as well as certain practices such as laughing, spitting and turning a somersault.—New York American.

Doing Without the Dot.

The small letter "i" was formerly written without the dot. The dot was introduced in the fourteenth century to distinguish "i" from "n" in hasty and indistinct writing. The letter "j" was originally used where the letter "j" is now employed. The distinction between "i" and "j" was introduced by the Dutch printers at a comparatively recent date, and the "j" was dotted because the "i" from which it was derived, was written with a dot.

Value of Religion.

"Some people," said the Rev. Mr. Goodman, "can never be made to appreciate the value of religion."

"It's rain, rain," replied Matchcats, the merchant; "they don't know how to catch the church trade at all."—Philadelphia Press.

Fish Insensible to Pain.

How sensitive to pain are fish? A correspondent writes: "I have a small pool which is stocked with trout. I keep an accurate account of those I catch and what I do with them. The other morning a big jackdaw broke the worm hook with which I had hooked him. That evening I hooked and landed a good trout, also with worm tackle, which proved to be my friend of the morning, as right down in his stomach was the broken gut and hook, and, besides this, in his bill was a March brown fly hook which, according to my fishing book, must have been there many weeks. A fish with a fly hook in his mouth, a worm hook in his stomach and ready to gulp down bait must be quite impervious to what we mortals call pain."

Butterflies in Mimicry.

Caterpillars and butterflies go far in the line of mimicry. They assume the strangest, most impossible disguises, appearing now in the shape of a twig or stem, now as a bundle of dark-green pine needles, and now again as a bird or flower, all for the innocent purpose of concealing themselves from the insatiative eyes of their enemies, the birds. When the caterpillar lives on the grass he is striped up and down like it, or foliage that supports him. When he feeds upon broad leaves that has a midrib and branching veins, his stripes and streaks run crossways at the same angle as those of the food plant.

Pursuit of Pleasure.

Cast an eye into the city world; what see we, for the most part, but a life of ourselves, crucified between fantastical beings, worn out in the lines pursuit of pleasure; creatures that have, as it, condemned themselves, yet still pursue their own instruction? They deceived unanimously of "the good" remains of what is called delight!

Poverty.

Poverty is no crime, but it is frightful handicap. Most of the ills of life of the world is caused by the efforts of the poor to keep pace with the rich.

A man who bored all his friends with his incessant talking prided himself on being able to hypnotize people. One day while assembling this and performing other feats of incredibility on his friends' faces he turned to one of them and said:

"Certainly," replied the friend; "you have only to speak."

Next day on resuming his journey he was horrified to find dogs suspended from trees in all directions or drowned in the River, with stones around their necks. He stopped a weeping urchin, who was hurrying off with a pet pup in his arms, and learned to his dismay that he was supposed to be an excise officer who was taking notes of all the dogs he saw in order to prosecute the owners for unpaid taxes.

A good example of the economic use of a Scotch expression floats this way from we know and where. Nervous Indigestion

The action of digestion is controlled by nerves leading to the stomach. When they are weak, the stomach is deprived of its energy. It has no power to do its work. If you want permanent relief, you must restore this energy. Dr. Miles' Nervine restored nervous energy, and gives the organs power to perform their functions.

"For many years I was so solid a sufferer from nervous indigestion that I could not walk a mile without being almost a cripple. I tried all kinds of medicine and various physicians with little or no relief, until one night last Christmas I read in the Ladies' Home Heart Cure advertisement. I purchased it make one more trial which I did in the morning of Christmas day. I slept and ate so much that I continued the medicine until I had taken more than a dozen bottles. I am now free from pain and in every way in body, mind and spirits since. I make a special point to encourage the use of Dr. Miles' Nervine, a remedy deserving the highest praise."—MRS. SPAN OF THIS WOMAN'S LIFE.

Juliana Lopez, Living in Guatemala, Is Still Active at 130.

The oldest woman in Central America, probably the oldest woman on this continent, if not in the world, lives at Gualan, Guatemala. Juliana Lopez has seen one century roll by and nearly the third of another. Born in 1777 in the Alpatz plantation, she is 130 years of age. Despite her years, Juliana is active. She can walk long distances in a day without apparent fatigue. Her eyesight is good, her memory remarkable. She is in the household service of Miss Trinidad Vasquez and performs light domestic tasks for a day rarely missed since she came from Guatemala independence. Only a year before her birth did the United States of America proclaim their freedom. She came into the world subject of Charles III. of Spain. That great King died two years after his birth. When she first saw the light Poland was suffering under the rule of Frederick II. of Prussia, Catherine of Russia, and Joseph of Germany. France was in the throes of the terrible upheaval which carried him to the scaffold. Napoleon was still a dreamer. Louis Philippe was unborn. Under the reign of George III. Pitt was at the helm when at St. Petersburg Suvorov rolled without obstacle in Poland.

KILLING THE GOLDEN GOOSE.

Reckless Methods Are Exterminating Mexico's Rubber Shrub.

The Mexican government has had its attention called to the rapid depletion of the gseapile rubber shrub, which grows wild in several States. The discovery that a great number of rubber shrubs had perished from this shrub was made only a few years ago, and since that time more than $30,000,000 of American and Mexican capital has been invested in rubber factories and in purchasing land upon which the shrub grows. The American concern employed exclusively in this business that it can be produced from seed and that by proper cultivation it can be made to attain a commercial size in four times the time required. Upon other lands, however, there has been a ruthless extermination of the shrub and this may mean being paid to its reproduction. It is stated that unless measures can be taken to place the seed the industry soon will suffer from lack of supply of the product. It is with the view of husbanding and replenishing the shrub that the Federal government has sent its botanist and agricultural experts into the gapeile growing region.

The officers made a search of Commerais' residence by a large posse of county officers and found a complete set of counterfeiting apparatus. The officers assert that the molds have been in his family for years.

BUSINESS ON UPTURN.

Nation's Trade in Some Cases Surpasses Normal.

Careful analysis of commercial, industrial and agricultural conditions made by representatives of the Chicago Record-Herald throughout the United States shows "that business activity in all lines is steadily recurring to normal and has in some cases exceeded it. Crops are unusually large and the number of unemployed men and of empty railroad cars is rapidly marked decreases.

Bradstreet's, one of Uncle Sam's most reliable business barometers, the Chicago postoffice receipts, registered an exceptionally reassuring indication. Saturday that the flow of business throughout the country has taken a sharp upturn. Statistics on the postal receipts of the country were compiled in New York and made public by Postmaster Edward M. Morgan of the eastern metropolis. They the business pulse was shown to be quickening by the fact that the receipts of the New York office for June of this year were 527,981.28 higher than in June, 1902. Figures were forwarded from fifty of the largest offices to Postmaster Morgan, and of this number thirty-three made a showing of increases during the month of June, 1902, over the receipts of June, 1902. The aggregate receipts of these fifty offices reached the large total of $7,305,800, a gain of $610,285 over the business of the same offices in June, 1901.

In Chicago fully 10,000 railroad men have gone back to work in the last six months, that of the lines that laid off last winter are at work again. The idle cars in the Chicago district have been relieved and for about the high number reached in May. Illinois will have a winter wheat crop of 30,000,000 bushels, which is a little less than last year. The corn crop will be 275,000,000 bushels, which is 20,000,000 bushels more than last year. The corn crop will be 2,500,000,000 bushels about the same as last year.

General conditions seem promising in Wisconsin, where the big manufacturing establishments report an increase in business actual and in inquiries. J. H. Klapp, of Milwaukee, president of the National Car Service Association, says that by Nov. 1 there will be a car shortage.

With all factories and shops in Ohio busy and its vicinity running full time, the outlook is for another year of bountiful crops in Nebraska and surrounding states, the industrial outlook in that city is most promising. In Kansas school dedrooms have been active, but the yield of corn will be the heaviest in the States history. There is a heavy demand for manufactured lines.

Secretary George A. Wells, of the Iowa Retail Lumber Association, in his annual estimate made public at Des Moines, shows crops in Iowa to be slightly above normal with prospects for the future favorable.

St. Louis reports conditions in the wholesale and retail mercantile lines as fast resuming normal and keeping freight business moving fairly well.

At Indianapolis there are probably from 15,000 more skill menployed, but conditions are improving. Factories generally are putting more men to work.

Arrives from Detroit say that business conditions in Michigan, though not normal, are showing a steady improvement and are much better than three or four months ago. Summer crops are reported from Iota, grain and fruit region.

In Ohio crops are uniformly good and prices on farm products are the best in years. Every trunk line railroad entering Cincinnati reports a steadily increasing freight business.

Investigation made at Pittsburg showed that a gradual improvement was set in in all lines in western Pennsylvania, West Virginia and eastern Ohio, and that the industrial and commercial returns were that way as the center. This is evidenced by the opening of mines, and increase in the coke and coal operations. While the wages are something from 30 to 40 per cent capacity, more men are being put to work every day. A same estimate of the number of men at work in Allegheny County in the mills and furnaces is placed at 75,000, while in the mining and coaling districts not a man need be idle. The mills and mines have been operating within the last thirty days. At the Baldwin locomotive works in Philadelphia 1,000 men have been taken back in the last three weeks.

Norfolk and Southern Receivership.

The Federal Court in Norfolk, Va., has placed the Norfolk and Southern railway in the hands of receivers upon the application of the Trust Company of America, the railroad asserting. The road recently has bought in a number of lands lines on borrowed capital and could not make good. A reorganization committee has been formed.

Men Crowding Out Cattle.

One reason for the high price of meat is the fact that the big cattle ranges of the Southwest have been rapidly taking up in addition in the last two years, with a consequent clearing of the pastures for cultivation. The prices for cattle on the hoof are higher than ever. In all the large cities the poorer people have begun systematic boycotts of the butchers who charge the high prices. The result is that people are eating less meat and more fruit and vegetables than heretofore.

Three-Cent Fare Lines Are Short.

The Municipal Traction Company of Cleveland, Ohio, which has been operating the city's six lines on a three-cent fare carried on by Mayor Tom L. Johnson, reports a deficit of $53,000 for May. But Mayor Johnson says that this was due solely to the prevailing strike than to the reduced fare.

The International Association of Police Chiefs adopted a resolution urging a uniform law regulating the sale and use of Jiujitsu weapons. A resolution also was adopted condemning the cartooning and caricaturing of policemen.

W. J. BRYAN IS NAMED FOR THE THIRD TIME

Democratic Party Hoists Him as Standard Bearer in Battle for Presidency.

CHOSEN ON THE FIRST BALLOT.

Convention's Progress Is Delayed by Slow Work of the Resolutions Committee.

Denver correspondence.—

With Jennings Bryan of Nebraska was nominated for the presidency by the Democratic party in national convention at 3:40 o'clock Friday morning. At the same session the platform on which Mr. Bryan and his running mate are to make their political bid to the American electorate was adopted unanimously. It was a Bryan platform from first to last, even the anti-trust plank being finally adopted as Mr. Bryan wanted it. Both the nomination of Mr. Bryan and the adoption of the platform were accompanied by scenes of exhibit enthusiasm.

Bryan	892½
Cleveland	86
Gray	59½

The nomination was made unanimous on motion of W. S. Hammond of Minnesota, who had nominated Governor Johnson.

The convention was called to order at 11:20 o'clock Thursday. Henry Ia. Clayton of Alabama took the gavel as permanent chairman, and delivered a speech lasting an hour. Clayton's speech was well received by the 11,000 persons crowded into the auditorium. It was cribbed, compared with the address Hell of California delivered when he took the platform Tuesday. Chairman Clayton denounced the Republican party, President Roosevelt and the Chicago convention in scathing terms. He did not mince his words in characterization of the sins of omission and commission of the Republicans as he saw them. His remarks were taken as a message direct from Bryan. He had conferred with the Nebraskan and praised his speech at his suggestion, according to common report.

Thursday was the biggest day of the convention, with the stage set for the nomination of William J. Bryan for the Presidency on a platform practically drafted by himself. The only exception being the anti-injunction plank, which was more radical than the Nebraskan desired. It was planned that after the address of Mr. Clayton the convention would take a recess until night, which meant that the nomination of a candidate for the presidency would not come until longed Democracy nearly held a stand out while for five minutes the human lungs poured out Niagara of sound. Then the band added to the din. Any by Dahlman of Omaha took the rostrum and led the crowd in cheering. Hundreds were let loose from the galleries. An immense picture of Bryan hidden behind a shield over the speaker's desk was released in sight of the convention. Thousands of flags were waving all over the hall. After ten minutes of cheering the parade of the States began.

Delegates surged from all parts of the hall toward the rostrum with the State standards. Not for one moment did the wild clamor cease. One after another the band rocked off popular airs. The reverberations of the musical songs, while the reminder of the ceremony piled up the din and night. Little girls were hoisted on the shoulders of men and held time to the music. Women fell into the parade around the hall by the dozen. New York and Canada were seen beckoned to join the fun in vain.

Counter-Lamed Demonstration.

The management of the convention had prepared for a wild demonstration, counting in discretion, if not to down Bryan, a record-breaking display which was to be made in the convention hall first mention of Mr. Bryan's name in the convention.

In the hall within the auditorium at the moment the nomination was made there was a counter-demonstration. Not yet so dense that not nothing was packed with human people, thinned out in the moment of Bryan's name, and in a waiting and the intense disenchantment of the Bryan men. Not a single banner—the one flag and gallery on gallery of agitated forms, the women in the boxes, the representatives of many of them confined, a myriad of flags and banners.

As the announcement of the Nebraska's patent nomination was made there arose a sudden storm of cheers, waving flags, handkerchiefs, newspapers, hats and coats, anything and everything which could be called up upon to wave aloft or hurl into the air, while a legion of musical pieces cut from these 10,000 throats in excellent yelps, catcalls, Comanche war whoops, with the added din of shrieking horns, the roar of megaphones and the strike of the band playing an exultant air.

When on a second order could be secured out of this pandemonium, a demonstration. Static after State which had in the morning cried for Johnson or Gray fell into line with the overwhelming outcome and some time was consumed in the Nebraska delegation.

Brilliant session or lessening volume the roar continued for forty-five minutes before quiet could be restored his sent. The yelling continued disjointed for a quarter of an hour longer and was finally stopped when the sergeant-at-arms, turned out the lights of the auditorium. The Taft ovation at Chicago was mild in comparison to the ovation tendered the name of Bryan.

The convention adjourned at 2:30 o'clock Friday morning to meet again in the afternoon, after having been in session continuously for nineteen consecutive hours. As the delegates and representatives left the hall the echoes of exhausted enthusiasm still reverberated in the building, while crowds outside took up the shout and bore it along the down and sisses streets, awakening the sly joes as the first pale rays of dawn were breaking in the east, still resounding the cries in November. Tuesday.

WILLIAM SHELTON, CLERK'S NATIONAL FAME.

The recess was also made necessary because the resolutions committee was not ready to report.

Delay of the committee until the last hour was brought about not alone by platform perplexities, but it was said by the strong desire of many of the states to get the house they believed would move from recording the name of the Nebraskan. Every delegation had desired, so it was given out, would be given the opportunity to indorse the chief candidate after the first nominating speeches had had their work.

Bryan was placed in nomination before midnight by Ignatius J. Dunn, of Tampa, but it was after 3 o'clock before the balloting began. Between the nomination and the balloting came the reading of the platform by Governor Haskell of Oklahoma, chairman of the resolutions committee. The platform was unanimously adopted by the convention after the committee on resolutions had spent fifty-seven hours in framing its many planks.

Mr. Bryan's third nomination was made amid scenes of frenzied enthusiasm. The result came after an all night session, which was kept in a condition state of turmoil up to the call to order. Nebraska's name was the last one called, and the chairman of the convention announced the result of the roll call.

Speeches Before Platform.

Despite of fearing from the resolutions committee the convention seemed determined to hear a number of speeches Thursday night and so spent the greater part of the night in listening to speeches. The speeches were taken as a message direct from Bryan. He had conferred with the Nebraskan and praised his speech at his suggestion, according to common report.

Bryan Cheered for 55 Minutes.

A William Jennings Bryan, although four hours in the morning the vice presidential situation was up in the air, for above the one-million-a-year-level elevation of honor. In a process of elimination the two-score and odd possibilities and probabilities whose names had been confidently brought to the convention city had narrowed down to a field of four, and the eightyeight minutes. Had the tumult continued six more minutes the eliminating down process went on merrily, and when the dust cleared away there would be one less seven, sleepy-eyed, hoarse-voiced and languid, the name of only four candidates were brought before them. The four who survived out of a field of over forty entries were:

John W. Kern, Indiana.
Charles A. Towne, New York.
Archibald McNeil, Connecticut.
Clark Howell, Georgia.

Chairman Clayton was so hoarse after the enthusiastic message night session that he yielded the gavel to Ollie James of Kentucky, the man who once stolen the chairman when he talks above a whisper.

ANYTHING TO OBLIGE A LADY.

Gallant Dancer Simply Misunderstood Fair Partner's Request.

The store is told of a young Oregon girl, a favorite in society, but who was poor and had to take care not to get her evening gowns soiled, as her number was limited.

At a dance not long ago a great big, redfaced, perspiring man came in and asked her to dance. He wore no gloves. She looked at the well-meaning but model hands disparagingly and thought of the immaculate back of her waist. She hesitated a bit and then said, with a winning smile:

"Of course I will dance with you, but, if you don't mind, won't you please use your handkerchief?"

The man looked at her blankly a moment or two. Then a light broke over his face.

"Why, certainly," he said.

Dinner Time.

The dinner bell should be a signal for the happiest time of the day. Every member of the family should go to the table in the best of humor. Much can should bring his best trouble and most cheerful things to it. No one should be allowed to complain or relate his or her troubles there. The assembling round the dinner table should be an occasion for the fun and laughter and cheerful talk—the antidote of indigestion.

A task. To be honest, to be kind; to earn a little and to spend a little less; to make upon the whole a sum by inquiry for his presence; to renounce when that must be necessary, and not to be unnerved; to keep a few friends, but those without reality; to love, and be, on the same given conditions, to keep friends with himself; here is a task for all that man can do.—Lowell.

—There are three most detestable creatures in the world—the hyena, the rattlesnake and the gossip-monger. The three, or any one of the three, deserve a short shrift. A Bit of Early History.

It may interest the present and rising generation to know that the three men "really and truly" white settlers of Charlevoix are here in Charlevoix today. They are Myron Gver and his two sisters, Mrs. "Jack" Pagnan and Mrs. B. Cooper, mother of Henry C. Cooper.

These three pioneers came to Beaver Island from Mt. Clemens in July 1852. From Beaver Island they came to "Pine River" in November of the same year.

This was before Mormon times and before John S. Dixon located here. At that time there were only a few fishermen here but one ff them was Chas. H. Wright, father of Allen Wright, now an employee in Harrison Bedford's store.

Mrs. Pagnan and Mrs. Cooper are in fairly good health and you could not kill Myron Gver with a club.

Letter From Mrs. Carlstein.

CHICAGO, July 26, '08.

Editor Sentinel:

As you know, we left on the Manitou Sunday, July 12th, and arrived in Chicago Monday at 8:30 a. m. The Captain and Steward were very thoughtful for our comfort. Mr. Koester and other friends met us at the boat, also delegations from the G. A. R. and the Masonic Lodge.

Mr. S. Cockrane, the undertaker, one of the doctor's most intimate friends, took charge of the casket which was tenderly guarded in his beautiful new chapel, a block from our residence, where more than two hundred friends paid their tribute of mourning and affection.

On Tuesday, at 10:30 a. m. services were held at Rose Hill Chapel, conducted by Home Lodge No. 508, A. F. A. M. and George H. Thomas Post, No. 5, in whose beautiful lot the doctor's worn out body was laid to rest.

The floral tributes, both from friends and societies, were many and beautiful. Mrs. Helen Brown was organist, and Mrs. C. H. Haney and Miss M. Billings sang.

I quote from the Evanswood Citizen of July 18, the following tribute:

"He was a man of the warmest heart and one who was ever ready to respond to the call of his profession in time of need, whether poor or rich, and was absolutely loyal to his profession. Those who have been brought back from the jaws of death by his skill—who have known him in the sick room and who have been cheered by his very presence will miss him. His friends will long for his hearty greetings and the many pleasant hours spent in his society. The deceased leaves a wife and one daughter."

The doctor was a member of the A. F. & A. M., National Union, Thomas Post No. 5 G. A. R., American Medical Society, Chicago Medical Society, and Order Eastern Star. 100.

MRS. OLIVIA CARLSTEIN.

The Big Fair.

The Traverse City papers say that the Grand Traverse Region fair is already an assured success.

The entertainment committee reports excellent progress, the general program being as follows:

The first day will be "republican day." The exhibits are all to be in place and the entries at 9 o'clock on the day previous to the first day of the fair, so that instead of taking all of the first day in getting exhibits in place, etc., the fair will start off at "full blast" when Governor Warner presses the button on the forenoon of "republican day" In addition to the governor and Lieutenant Governor Kelley, who it is expected will be in attendance other speakers of state and national prominence will be present.

The second day will be "Grand Traverse day." In this occasion it is expected that addresses will be given by those prominent in Grange, Equity and Gleaner circles.

The third day will be "democratic day," and the chairman of the democratic county committee, who is a member of the entertainment and program committee, promises speakers of state and national prominence.

The last day will be "Travers City day." It is proposed that this be made a holiday that everyone may attend.

Reports from various sections of the region indicate a large attendance and very great interest, and it is now believed that there is no possible doubt that this will be the grandest success ever attempted in Northern Michigan in the way of an agricultural, horticultural and industrial exposition.

R. L. LEWIS, City Clerk.

Brave Old Capt. "Tip" Miller.

From the Frankfort Express:

Capt. Harrison Miller, who has been stationed at Point Betsey Life Saving Station for the past twenty-one years and who resigned his position on account of falling eyesight was probably the best known captain on the chain of lakes.

Capt. Miller was born in Westchester county, New York in 1838, and came west with his parents in 1846, who located on Beaver Island in 1849 and has lived in sight of Lake Michigan ever since.

He married Bridget Harkins in 1859, to this union ten children were born—three sons and seven daughters—of which two daughters are living, Mrs. W. H. Gibbson of Petoskey and Mrs. Seth Gates of Milwaukee, and 12 grandchildren.

In his boyhood days he followed fishing and sailing and was appointed keeper of the Beaver Island light in 1863 and served until 1874. He entered the life saving service in 1876, being appointed keeper of the Beaver Island station when the life saving service was first established and the first built on the lakes. There being no regular crew in those days he had to hire men when needed and was greatly handicapped, although he did some great work as the records will show on the J. I. Case.

On March 14, 1887, he was transferred to Point Betsey where he remained until July 10th when he tendered his resignation on account of his eyesight. Principally, with the exception of his eyesight there are very few men at 50 years of age who will be found as spry and active as he is at 70.

Notably among the numerous wrecks attended by Capt. Miller during his many years of active service were the schr. J. I. Case on Nov. 2, 1883, schr. Ebenezer, Nov. 27, 1891, schr. F. Pitch, Aug. 28, 1898, Str. St. Lawrence, Nov. 25, 1898, Str. Waverly, June 6, 1899, tug G. R. Green, Oct. 27, 1899, Str. Jessie Spalding, Nov. 20 1904, Schr. Chandler J. Wells and many others.

Capt. Miller or "Tip" as he is best known by all who know his genuine worth, not only as a citizen, but as a public officer in the services he has rendered as well, has a host of friends not only here but wherever known, and while they sympathize with him in his retirement from the service they wish to extend to him their best wishes for his future welfare.

No higher tribute could be paid to any man than that paid to Capt. Miller by the inspector of this district when he said, "Capt. Miller is an expert boatman of excellent judgment and courage which has stood severe tests many times. In his retirement the service loses one of its most valuable assessors. If I were out in the lake today on a wreck or in danger, there is no man in the world I would rather see coming out to me in the surf boat than old Harrison Miller. If any man in the service can handle a boat to this day near perfection, Captain Miller is that man."

Time for the Bath.

It is not a time when you stay in the tub too long, especially if the water be hot or cold. If one stays in a hot bath too long one is apt to feel weakened. A great deal more is to be gained from a short, cold rub, which is wonderfully refreshing.

CHAPTER XIII.

"You shall hear from me early in the morning," the neck Prince del Pino had told Mrs. Waring when he left her at her house; and then, turning his motor in the direction of his hotel, he gave himself up to the business of the moment, smiling the most of the brief time left on him.

It was half past ten when he sent outside of a house in S street and consulted his watch.

Half past ten. Very late for a visit, and yet perhaps were awake in the house!

Through the closed shutters and open windows came the sound of one of Chopin's waltzes, played by a girl's slightly amateur fingers on a piano that was not of the best. But on that night of wildness, in the silent lifeless street, the air floated out with a certain graceful startlingness.

Curbing his impatience, Sarto walked until the last note of the piano was observed, regardless of the digit of time; and then, resuming the steps, rang the bell twice.

There was a little hesitation before a maid could come along the hall and the door opened.

I had almost given up Your Highness," said Annette Haverill.

Her cheek was flushed, due to hard looking up at her.

"I am at a nonplus for the interest of the hour," he began in a low voice. "But I have been sitting at Chevy Chase and was detained longer than I thought. I should only stay a moment."

The girl led the way, without speaking, into the drawing room, where two candles were burning, revealing the piano and piles heaped with music. Behind it the window seat seen, letting in a light breeze the street.

Hence—speculated the neck prince. He distinctly sniffed at a lessful stain by on the center table. "Mademoiselle," he murmured, lifting the heavy hands. "He has good cause to think of you in Paris!"

Annette made a faint nonjuncance. She had seated herself on the piano stool, a glower like light on her face and lit light.

Turning away from the table, Sarto leaned beside the piano.

"Ah, I had forgotten that!" he said, speaking sotto voce. "M. Blind remains after I am gone. He has the loss of his!"

"After you have gone?" echoed Annette.

She stood motionless, staring with parted lips and a look of pain in the face of the man who bent over the piano, his hand, middle finger on some keys.

"Yes," he said, speaking in very quiet tones, in which his customary expressive voice had a certain pathos. "It is to say goodby I am here in Washington. Before morning I will have left Washington. I shall never see you again."

The last words rang with an frequency, which unhandled her and a silence through his listener. Turning, forgetful of the silver-ring lights in the street below, she leaned on his face, her eyes white with the Pook of an unfathomed pain and with the sense of loss.

"Annette?" cried Ludovic Sarto.

"Leave in a great mystery! • • • It was on Monday the weather opened after one cold, dark hearts so silently that we were scarcely aware of it—opened one day we see it for the first time mirrored in the lake of Chevy Chase.

At some time—when the chauffeur could not tell—some Mister Wind, gentle and fragrant, the friendship he felt for this girl had lain in the mind of his heart.

And in this instant of miracle the earth—whole being his double nature, were the dark side which had achieved its contour through years—the earth had sensed through the same Divine alchemy—the here metal in him transformed and purified.

There are certain moments in this dull life of ours when the fresh in on the wise—moments of feeling, illumined like bell lumes—moments as sweet as the first note of a nocturne and as enamored.

Even as Ludovic Sarto and Annette Haverill gazed into each other's eyes, the moment passed by, never to return.

The next a little frightened voice came into the man's heart. "Wait a moment!" he said hoarsely. "I—I have something to tell you!"

Turning sharply away, he took a few turns up and down the room, speaking aloud with the ordeal that was suddenly upon him.

For the girl must be told the truth and it was terrible! Also! the discovery of her arrest demanded the retending of life.

It was a strange psychic fact that to Sarto now, in spite of his slippery, dishonest life, he was a strong personality. The man who loved Annette Haverill—and was loved in return—could no longer wear hidden the Prince del Pino.

Jaded to meet come forth and bear his responsibilities. The law of self-preservation, which he had only acknowledged so far, had given way to another diviner, for the first time in his life the secret carrier chauffeur lost his head to the law of self-preservation.

Turning suddenly, he looked at the girl at the piano.

Annette was leaning forward, facing him, a faint nervous smile on her lips, her eyes full of a thrilling, shy expectancy.

Watching her, his wonderfully keen, almost feminine—perceptive disarming the girl's soul, Sarto saw, with shudder, sickening horror and self-disgust, all that the girl had lost in the exchange of soul was imagining. A fairy tale no longer—fairy tale—with a prince for its hero and for its heroine.

The man who loved her knew, with an inward recoil, that he had lost the right to her pretty little castle in the air—upon its foundation.

Standing before her, he spoke formally. "Miss Haverill, tell me, how long have we known each other—you and I?"

"Why, Mr. Sarto, I don't understand the fairness that of country or habitation. It was just at the beginning of spring that we met at Island the Magnolia."

"Yes, and I was about to say that we have known no longer than that. Look back over it!

"It seems years, with sudden delightfulness. Where have you seen me before? Think! Remember!"

But the girl only gazed at him with astonished, half-frightened eyes.

"Before?" she faltered. "I—I don't understand."

Sorry moved impatiently. "The surprise has blinded you to reflection. Think!" he urged relentlessly. "Of

"I will be waiting," said Annette very softly.

For a long instant their eyes met. Here were, full, open, but into the man's there came a faroff, ineffable look as of one who sees visions and dreams dreams.

"Some day the pilgrim will come back to us," he said.

At 10 o'clock the next morning, while Mrs. Waring was sitting up in bed and sipping her chocolate, her maid brought her a flat, square, brown-paper parcel, just arrived by a messenger boy.

Giving a glance at the address, written in a delicate, foreign-looking hand, Gunnie tore open the wrapping with excited fingers, pulled out the orthodox cotton wool so suggestive of a jewelry, and revealed a chamois glove-case!

Pressed in it was a card on which was engraved, "Il Principe Ludovico del Pino," and underneath in pencil, "Dieter known as Lodovic Sarto. Mrs. Warings's chauffeur, begs to send her the enclosed jewels, as a slight return for the many kind favors which have rendered his nomade Washington sojourn so agreeably diverting."

About a week after Mrs. Waring's very sudden departure for England, Town Talk ran the following paragraph:

"Prince Ludovico del Pino—as the papers have it—quietly arrived in New York yesterday on the Sesdia, and is its guest Newport's extreme exclusive circle of Cliffs and millions to entertain.

"Yes, it is possible that there are two Ludovico del Pinos! If not, may we ask the identity of the mysterious Italian nobleman who disguised himself in Washington two weeks ago in the train of that noted society lady, Mrs. Hermione Waring, whose rumored engagement in the 'Land of Lucy,' we understand, is an unfolded fact?"

(The End.)

WOMAN LAWYERS' CHANCE

If there is any hint of a moral attached to the New York Sun story, now it is that to establish clearly their legal and judicial equality women lawyers should not be content to regard themselves as philosophically as do men lawyers the fact that there are one of the English bred lawyers in New York City tells it:

In the early days of my legal stipendiaship I was in a Wisconsin town sounding my vocation, and I was, for the great mass of the place, an old friend of my father's, gave me the privilege of a law library.

Like many other private law libraries in small places I have visited, this was unsurpassed in number of volumes and value by any I have ever known about in New York, where space is so precious that a lawyer must perforce depend on outside help for his references.

In a smaller town you must own the books yourself or go without. The judge owned about and I browsed with wonder and delight about among the shelves, which filled three good-sized rooms, and I realized for the first time my late study had been done, and how tremendous an undertaking it was for a young woman like myself to seek to make my headway in it.

That is a photograph of the world, and now, Jesus drew itself did not. He saw and called attention to the fact that the inequality in the world, Herbert, he said, is not in the ability, it, be proposed as leveling. There is no such thing as equality. Men are ity between man and man. No law of human liberty is supposed to be possible whereas no state of lawless anarchy can ever make men equal—God made them so, therefore, God always has will be to the end.

Men are not as children lie is not the real difference in men, but the way they fill their station. Reward is not in the proportion of what one does for what you do, but how you do. The ten-talent man can have no higher reward than the five-talent man. Equality minister may work miracles. In the Christian religion, it is the great things. Getting up is not getting up. The coming man is the becoming one, and he is the man who is the most meritority or one raised. Greatness consists not in what one is but in what is the same with God. With Him there is neither but nor first.

THE HEAVENLY VISION.

"I was not disobedient to the heavenly vision," Acts, xxvi, 19.

He who has seen a vision of his ideas may have missed all other prizes in life; perhaps, yet he finds through happiness and riches that could have become him in no other way. Here is the secret of satisfaction, here is high success in any life, that one shall have followed his ideals, and shall have kept the best steadily before him.

Many visions come to all. They may not come with the rushing of angels' wings, nor with strange and solemn voices and the thunders of Sinai, but some of the old time visions of great occasions and of knights or character are described in terms of the supernatural only because they seem so far above us. We make up the grandeur of our heroes, and we forget that we must that still, and hold the lovers of ideals in the place on one of the Englishmen of the churches, crowd the schools, hold the homes of men where the great visions are to be realized, and bring up the vast multitude in heaven, God never lifts a man from his place, and God rebuke, "God lent loves the common people because He has made so many of them."

These stories such as and deep-sighing for man to whom God has given but a little talent. I have met him in colleges. He traded all his patrimony to get there—he and his family are paying the tragedy begins. Tries he ever so hard, he is always at the bottom of his class. He goes into a profession and he is a failure in the eyes of men. In business he never gets ahead and constantly the temptation is with him just to take what he can. And yet somehow he must not fall in his place. The law seems to have made him responsible for the world; the future welfare of the world is in the hand of this poor, little, feeble man, who can do only his little best.

RANK AND WIN PLACIDITY.

By Rev. N. M'Gee Waters.

The parable of the talents—Matt. xxv, 14-30.

The question of rank has been the perpetual heartache of humanity. The Orient has solved the puzzle of caste. The West has solved it by democracy.

The West with its democracy has a part of the truth. It insists that man is not to be determined by what he was born or by his inheritance, but by his personal worth. Every man must have a full chance to be all the man there is in him to be.

But the East, with its clumsy caste system, also has a part of the truth. Inequality is a fact among men. When the West, as it has sometimes done, attempted democracy it meant anarchy among all men. It has fallen into grievous errors. Equality of opportunity, variety in ability is God's law.

Jesus spoke the truth. There is the Gwendolen man, Homer now man and named him Ulysses—there was found man who could bend his bow. Soldiers found him at the plow and his name was Homer. In New England he was born in a cabin in the foothill of Puritan civilization. He walked barefoot to the school. In our age he directs the facts of commerce and organizes corporations.

Jesus said the man to whom God has intrusted two talents. We know him as Homer. He lives in our block. His name is Ingalls. He is the average man. He is the average man. For of him is humanity principally made up. He makes up the grades of our schools. He makes up the number that fill said, hold the lovers of ideals in the place on one of the churches, crowd the schools, hold the homes of men where the great visions are to be realized, and bring up the vast multitude in heaven. God never lifts a man from his place, and God rebuke, "God lent loves the common people because He has made so many of them."

Time stinks such a man. He is not a man strong to endure, to make him despise the rugged path of duty, to make him attractive to cross blind to the greater world. He is not a man that angels may, food that has sustained the soul through long days in the desert, through wounded feet, disappointments, fears, forsaktaken, losses and bereavements. They are also in the great and to endure the shame who Love sent, the glory set before every man, with the will, and trading on every high path of service or of sacrifice. No man is worthy who has attained anything without this; nothing is impossible to those who cherish this high and lofty and blessed.

Livingstone, Lincoln, Garfield, Florence Nightingale would have failed without the vision. In the records of wage of time there would be no power to bear them up, on the strength of their daily experiences were enough to turn them from the closer path, but for the lofty confidence that they were doing the one work for them, but for the inspiration of the ideal before them.

Men are not in God's sense religion, to follow his ideal, to seek to do the best that day by day he knows, to do the highest duty that any lofty motive indicates, to take the path that leads up in love, and service, and purity of living. The reward is not in the place, but in the force its higher self, and so ever finds its heights before it.

The great question for every man in religion is, not so much whether he will obey the ten commandments, not so much whether he will bend to the dictate of church or preacher, but whether he will be obedient to the inner vision, of the voice from heaven that speaks in the soul and bid him follow, and bid him fill a life of self-control and rise to higher living, to sacrificial service. That vision calls us to parts of pain, that vision, if you but hear and seek to obey, makes transcendent demands of you. It is not the easy, heedless following of an emotional, romantic love for glory; it is the thorny path of the cross, the way of lowly sacrificing; it is so hard you to be heroic.

The thing that is calling like a cankerworm in your hearts, and robbing of our power, and stealing our possibilities is the force of ease, our hatred of the things that are hard, we allow to obey the heavenly vision because to do so would be to endure hardships, to make our soft and pleasant ways. So wrong ease is your life.

Our days are filled with a dull discontent, not because we do not possess the things of this life, but because we have missed its greatest prize, the joy of following an ideal. Nothing, there is nothing we need to cherish more to guard more closely than this, the vision that has kept us through the years for perfection, the hope of high living and service.

LAW AND GRACE.

By Rev. B. W. Dale, D.D., LL. D.

Text.—"For the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ."—John 1:17.

Grace came by Jesus Christ. You think that by an eternal law you must suffer for your sins. The Christian Gospel declares that Christ suffered for your sins to whom God has given but a little talent. CHICAGO MAN NAMED PROHIBITION LEADER

WATKINS IN SECOND PLACE.

Columbus Correspondence.

Eugene W. Chafin of Chicago, was nominated for President of the United States by the Prohibition national convention Thursday. For Vice President the convention named Aaron S. Watkins, of Ada, O., a professor in the Ohio Northern University. Both candidates are gubernatorial candidates of the Prohibition party in their respective States. The shortest platform on record and one containing for the first time in the history of important national parties in this country a declaration in favor of equal suffrage was framed for the consideration of the convention.

Republican and Democratic candidates and platforms were scored alike, and a number made to prove that Lincoln was a Prohibitionist was presented at the opening session of the Prohibition party convention. Mr. Watkins, Mr. Chafin and Bryan were slamming at friends of the Republican and of the temporary chairman, Robert H. Parker of Spring field, Ill.

Mr. Parker held the attention of his audience throughout his speech and at times moved his hearers to great enthusiasm.

"Take off your coat," and "Hit him hard!" were the delegates, and these shouts were interspersed with "Amens." The speech dealt with the east and then paid his compliments to the late United States Senator of Illinois, author of the famous liberty plank of the 1872 Republican platform. He read a letter from Wade H. Ellis, attorney general of Ohio and author of much of the Republican platform of this year, declaring that he could "not nailing in the Hunter plank "inconsistent with Republican principles."

"Caught with the goods!" shouted some one in the audience.

Dashing from the Republican party, Mr. Parker spoke of that "very talkative man from Illinois," and said that in the last sixteen years Mr. Bryan "has championed everything lesser under the sun in the way of a political issue except the prohibition question."

The convention was called to order at 10 o'clock in Memorial Hall by Charles Jones. The invocation was offered by Rev. E. L. Eaton of Illinois, and the Chaplain read the roll of the call for the convention the name of Herbert H. Dow, of Midland, Mich., was called by Rev. E. L. ADVICE FOR NERVOUS PEOPLE.

Exercise by Which System Is Refreshed and Invigorated.

For relaxing tense nerves there is nothing like a tonic bath and this special relaxing exercise:

The bath is quite simple—nothing but alternate sprays of hot and cold water, given for from five to ten minutes. This is possible for any one who can afford a rubber hose with a spray attachment, which fastens on to the spouts of the hot and cold spigot. It usually costs about $1.

Follow the bath with this exercise, which stimulates the nerves without the exceedingly tense force.

Stand with the weight of the body on the left foot, the right fixed lightly on the floor a little in advance of it. Raise slowly the right arm to the level of the shoulder, then move arm in a circle from right to left and reverse. The left arm is then treated in the same manner, with the weight of body on right foot.

By exercise of this kind the nervous system is refreshed and invigorated. It is important in doing the movements to relax so thoroughly that one forgets she has any muscles. In other words, the movement is to be quite involuntary.

Doctor Not Needed.

"I got an awfully funny note once from Gen. ——, his Bible-thumping on the staff of Gov. ——," said Dr. Shackleford. "His wife was taken with a sudden indisposition, he announced his services and asks him got the buggy ready to come for me. By the time the horse was hitched up and the medical had written me a note his wife recovered. But he sent the note anyway, with a postscript:

"'My Dear Doctor: I wish you would carry around this way as fast as you can. My wife is desperately ill. Jump into my buggy and come along. Don't let anything stop you.

"'P. S.—My wife having recovered, you need not come.'"

How a Cat Caught Two Rats.

I saw and a cat who did a rather remarkable rattlin feat. It stalked two young rats on the eaves of a log fat stable roof, and caught one in the usual way. The other leaped on to an adjoinerry tree just below. Bob, however, not satisfied, with the one grasped it firmly by the mouth, and then jumped leadlong for the other. Either he was very jerky or extraordinarily agile, for he lost to the ground with one rat still in his mouth and the other in his paws, and promptly killed them both.—Scotsman.

JAIL DOG CLEARS YARD.

He Attacks Tramp and Has Court to Himself Until Captured.

The big brown circulated bloodhound and mastiff that Assistantjuror Meinjah E. Mudock gave to the Mount Holly, N. J., jail a short time ago to run down escaped criminals, went on the campaign solo yesterday. Meanwhile the dog is missed, almost the keepers out of the yard and, as had the dog been absent for some hours, Sheriff Norcross started to show the dog two escaped tramps who had settled in his jail yesterday morning. Nobody had the courage to enter the jail yard. Even their cells, which open upon the yard, the prisoners gazed through their narrow windows, waiting for deadeye hours. The dog had behaved well until a "timid" armed Secretary started to cross the jail yard. The animal bounded toward Secretary and made a leap at his throat. Secretary fought him off and ran from the scene, taking refuge in barricaded himself. He was soon followed by the keepers. Are an exercise jail attaches appeared behind at the scene. Then some one saw for Sheriff Norcross and the dog was cornered into a corner, engaged and locked up.

CORN CROP IN SPLENDID SHAPE.

Reports from Three States Show Improvement in Conditions.

Special reports collected from various points in the tri-State territory around Sioux City, which includes the greatest corn country in the world, indicate that there is from a week to two weeks ahead of the growth of the corn, notwithstanding the rapid last year. Investment rules during May and June showed cheers among the farmers of Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota, but the jumping weather of last week has brought corn along at great speed. Even in the low lands of the Missouri valley which were inundated by floods even has picked up remarkably fast and the loss will be but slight. Conditions are especially promising in South Dakota; wheat, oats and other small grains are doing exceedingly well, and in some sections harvesting has begun.

The Sioux and will not have to fight to the courts to get into Superior. The other roads have agreed to abide by the decision of the Wisconsin commission.

The headquarters of the Wabash railroad has been removed from Pittsburg to Cleveland and the general offices of the road are building in Pittsburg will be retained.

The federal grand jury at Richmond, Va., has indicted the Chesapeake and Ohio Railway and the Pennsylvania Railroad together with a Richmond grain dealer, on the charge of rebating.

The Burlington road attempted to file with the Secretary of State at St. Paul a mortgage for $20,000,000 covering all of its property. The Secretary of State refused to accept the mortgage and filed a replica fee of $100,000 be paid into the State treasury. Another thing that will be required of the road is that it give a bond for $100,000 to cover its road bills, together with bailees. This comes from the Minnesota railroad commission. The railroad must comply the stable system.

Trees will be planted for a double purpose, the company says, to keep the track clear of snow and as they grow up the larger ones will be used for bridge timber, telegraph poles, etc., while the smaller trees will be utilized for fence posts and ties.

Chairman Knapp of the interstate commerce commission has decided the case of the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce against the Northern Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern railroads, in which the complaint challenged the reasonableness of the Minneapolis and Duluth rate on flour and millstuffs, to Ashtabula, Wis. During the proceedings the Great Northern joined with the Northern Pacific and Chicago and Northwestern in a joint rate. The commission held that the reduced rate on millstuffs is not unreasonable.

Engineers have taken the field to begin the actual survey of the contemplated short line of the Pennsylvania railroad between Chicago and Cincinnati, via Marion, Ind. It is a direct with the Pennsylvania at Hagerstown.

Chicago hopes that the leading railroad managers have agreed to defer the question of a general wage out for four months in "a hope that by that time either conditions will be improved so that a cut will not be necessary or that labor organizations will recognize the necessity of a reduction. It is the feeling generally in some companies that wages might not be so cut as long as dividends are paid.

SIX AUTOISTS KILLED WHEN TRAIN HITS CAR

Mother, Father and Three Girls Are Among Those Dashed to Death.

FAIL TO SEE LOCOMOTIVE.

C. S. King, Fort Wayne Politician, and Family and Guest in Fatal Accident.

Six lives were crushed out in an instant near Columbia City, Ind., when a Pennsylvania railroad train smashed an automobile in which were Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sherman King, their two daughters, Miss Fayon Hendricks and Carl Tomkins, the chauffeur, all of Fort Wayne. The machine was stopped about a half mile west of Columbia City at a railroad crossing by a freight train and the chauffeur slowed onto the second track, waiting for the freight to pass. He failed to see the Manhattan Limited passenger train which came at a high rate of speed. The automobile was demolished and the bodies of its six occupants were flung along the track for a distance of a hundred feet and terribly mangled. Skulls were fractured, arms and legs broken, chests crushed and clothing stripped off. No great was the force of the collision that the large locomotive of the passenger train was derailed.

The party was in Mr. King's automobile and was going from Fort Wayne to Lake Wawasee to spend Sunday. It is said that when the party started on the trip Mrs. King ordered the chauffeur to make the run in two hours and a half, which is about half an hour less than the usual time.

Mr. King's country was a member of the Indiana Legislature from Wabash County, being chairman of the Roads and Mines Committee. He was a member of the Columbia club at Indianapolis and well known throughout the State. He was one of the best known Republicans of Indiana and had taken a prominent part in public affairs. His daughters were Katherine aged 16, and Josephine aged 12. Miss Hendricks was 16 years of age and was a neighbor of the King family, whose guest she was to have been over Sunday at the King cottage on Lake Wawasee. She was a daughter of Robert F. Hendricks, of Fort Wayne.

Taggart's chauffeur, Harry Stoner, was driving the big touring car from Indianapolis to French Lick, where he and the two women in a buggy at Garfield City, one mile south of Columbus. The horse became frightened at the car and ran away. The two women were thrown from the buggy against an iron fence.

POLITICS and POLITICIANS

Eugene W. Chafin, Prohibition nominee for President, promises to speak in every county in Illinois.

Frank H. Hitchcock, general manager of Taft's pre-convention campaign, has filed his nomination papers as a candidate for delegate to the Republican convention.

President Roosevelt has refused an offer to make speeches for the receiver of a talking machine for the purpose of making records for public sale.

William H. Taft has completed in the Springs, Va., the first draft of his speech of acceptance, but he hopes to trim it down to certain 3,500 words.

Congressman Theodore E. Burton, in a statement issued at Cleveland, said while he designs to be elected United States Senator, he considers the decision of Taft more important and will not accept for his own candidacy.

W. J. Bryan speaks lightly and sarcastically of W. H. Taft's reported declaration that his campaign contributions from corporations will be accepted.

W. J. Bryan, in an address at his home, declared that society has not given the producer his share of the reward and that the government must correct the condition.

The Hoosiers State convention at Indianapolis, adopted a platform for Governor and reaffirmed the party's belief in the presidential low. Resolution of the law to the people was the main issue before the convention.

Another statesman quitting the Republican labor camp has been hoed by President Gompers of the Federation of Labor. This insists that their "ask no immunity for any one policy of wrongdoing." Well, they be workmen or officers, but labor insist upon equality before the law. Cling the Hoosier laborer's motion, declaring the unions to be a great conservative force in the Republican party.

Chicago hopes that the leading railroad managers have agreed to defer the question of a general wage cut for four months in "a hope that by that time either conditions will be improved so that a cut will not be necessary or that labor organizations will recognize the necessity of a reduction." It is the feeling generally in some companies that wages might not be so cut as long as dividends are paid.

HAS THREE MILLION ACRES.

Oklahoma Puzzled as to Whether to Sell Land on Salt Installments.

Under the initiative and referendum law of Oklahoma there is to be submitted to the voters of that State in the November election a proposal to sell the 3,000,000 acres of public lands which the State holds in its trust for public buildings funds. The idea for this purpose has been carefully drawn and contains minute details of the terms, conditions and methods of selling the land. It is a reprint of the laws in November give affirmative ballots for it, it will become effective as a law without action of any sort by the Legislature.

Ten years hence these lands will doubtless be worth several times more than they are now. But supposing that these 3,000,000 Oklahoma acres to be good for agriculture, they would cut up into 75,000 40-acre farms, settled and tilled by a thrifty farmer, contributing to the wealth of the State and paying taxes to the State's revenue fund and to local and State school funds.

If the lands are held they will be leased by a State Board and sold only to lessees of a subject of political controversy. The lessees will not have the incentive to cultivating and improving them that they would if they made yours of ownership in themselves and their children. It is probable, therefore, that in the end the lands will prove to be worth more to the State if sold now than if held for the future. Perhaps the State's thrifty posterity would bring later

Commercial failures in the United States during the first half of the year, from Dun's Review, were 8,700 in number and 9,000 failures in the first half of last year, for $77,000,000. Still, the report shows a decrease in failures, and that in the large majority of the period the showing was better, could for the last date that the commercial death rate is diminishing.

Cadillac Guests Dine Free.

Polished guests are desired to be becoming the best guide of London Hotel cents. Many smart young men are at to indulge in the practice of dropping a half dollar into their pocket and leaving the waiter. Chicago hopes that the leading railroad managers have agreed to defer the question of a general wage out for four months in "a hope that by that time either conditions will be improved so that a cut will not be necessary or that labor organizations will recognize the necessity of a reduction." TOLSTOI STINGS CZAR AS CIVILIZATION'S FOE

Scathing Arraignment of Government by Execution is Published.

THE EVIL SPREADS DEPRAVITY.

Reformer Says Crimes in Name of Law Are More Awful than Revolutionists' Acts.

Count Leo Tolstoi, in a long article published in London, indicts, with his old vivid literary skill, the present system of "government by execution" in Russia, the article concluding with a pathetic appeal to the better nature of his countrymen.

During the course of the article the Count writes:

"I can no longer endure it. I write this either that these inhuman deeds may be stopped or that my connection with them may be snapped and I no longer be a partner, whenever I may be conscious that these horrors are not committed in my own behalf, or still better too good that I dare not even dreams of such hopelessness, that they may put me on an iron frame twenty or twelve pounds a shroud and a cap and may push me also off a bench so

LOVE IDEA BREAKS WILL.

School Denied $51,000 for Teaching Boys and Girls on Subject Slate.

Any bequest in Pennsylvania to any institution that teaches evangelical love after the tenets of Swedenborg is void, so decided Judge Sulzer of the Lancaster County Orphans' Court at Lancaster, Pa. In the opinion distributing $51,785 in the estate of Frederick J. Kraemer, the gift of another enumerated in Swedenborg's book, Judge Smith declares, designate the children of the commonwealth and are in conflict with public policy. Concluding Judge Smith says:

"While it appears that the Academy of the Holy Angels is a school in which the Swedenborg doctrine is taught, it is also intended by the testator to receive the residue of his estate, yet it also appears that the testator's intention was not a proper one. While one in a lifetime may donate his property as he pleases, he may not do so after death according to the dictates of his own will, which is arbitrary in his case, and which is agreeable to him, and may create his own form of worship, yet he may not continue his estate to take effect after death for the nurture of objects outside the limits of human law.

"For that reason the bequest is decided to be void, and, it failing, the estate will be distributed under the intestate laws of the State."

There were three claimants to the fund in question, two rival factions in the Swedenborgian church and the heirs of the estate. The court awarded the fund to the heirs.

Mr. Kraemer died five years ago, but it was not known until recently that in his will he gave the residue of his estate for the endowing of a university of the Swedenborgian church, and the consolidated city of Philadelphia. The Swedenborgians claim that it is to teach the doctrines laid down in the writings of Swedenborg. The Academy of the Holy Angels is a preparatory school at Bryn Athyn, near Philadelphia, which is the seat of the Swedenborgian church.

The only complaint against the teaching is on conjugal love, and the court decrees its opinion to that feature and says that the teaching is conflict with the laws of the State and contrary to accepted public policy.

Charlevoix Sentinel.

WILLARD A. SMITH EDITOR.

August Spraying for the Codling Moth.

Even though apple trees are carefully sprayed in the spring it is seldom possible to have the winter varieties free from worms. This is due to the fact that the second brood of the worms appears in August after the affect of the spring spraying has been lost. The moths appear anywhere from August 10th to 25th and deposit their eggs for the most part upon the foliage. These hatch in about ten days and the small worms feed upon the leaves or perhaps upon the small fruits, and at length eat their way into the apples generally at the side, selecting, if possible, a point where two fruits are in contact or where a leaf rests upon the apple. From these facts it can be seen that it is possible to prevent injury to the fruit by spraying the trees before the eggs hatch, or about the middle of August. For this purpose there is nothing better than arsenate of lead used at the rate of two pounds in fifty gallons of water or, in the case of varieties subject to the attack of apple scab, it may be applied in Bordeaux mixture, but owing to the danger of spotting the fruit, this should not contain more than two pounds of copper sulfate and two pounds of stone lime in fifty gallons. Care should be taken to thoroughly spray the trees, covering the leaves as well as the fruits, as this will greatly increase the chances of destroying the small worms.

That this treatment will be effectual has been very conclusively demonstrated many times during the last few years as within the orchards that have not been sprayed at all, or that do not receive the August application, have had the fruit nearly ruined, by the codling moth, the trees that were sprayed between August 10th and 15th have been practically free from worms, thus, in some cases, doubling the value of the crop.

The use of arsenate of lead at this time will also be very helpful in destroying the fall web worm and other leaf-eating insects that often do serious harm to apple trees during the fall months.

While it is somewhat more expensive than Paris green, which is often used for the same purpose at the rate of about five ounces to fifty gallons of water, it will be much more effectual as it has far greater adhesive qualities and hence remains much longer on the trees, the Paris green being readily washed off by rains. It also has the advantage of not injuring the foliage while Paris green if used in water without the addition of lime sometimes does serious harm.

Especially if the trees were not sprayed with Bordeaux mixture earlier in the season, its use should not be omitted at this time as even though the variety is one that is not much injured by apple scab, the use of a fungicide in August will prevent the attack of various fungi and the leaves will be kept longer on the trees in a healthy condition, thus adding in the ripening of wood and in the production of fruit spurs for the crop the next year.

Mr. Earl's Ambition.

The people of Michigan will never elect a man to the governship whose mind is dominated by one idea. They do not want a "hobby" governor.

Horatio S. Earl, state road commissioner, and the leading apostle of the good roads propaganda is plastering the state with flaming red posters, announcing himself as a candidate for governor.

Plentiful platitudes about "more business and less political" and other high sounding political purity sentiments are given the people who run and read.

There is one word that sticks out between the lines like a vaudeville moving picture, and that is "Demagogue."

Mr. Earl has done the state much service in the work to which he seems to have been divinely called. We believe future generations of chafferers will rise up and call him blessed, and the farmers, between the periods of gathering the wheat and murdering the chafferers utter a prayer for Earl.

"Good roads Earl" is a pretty master in his line of work. He knows it so thoroughly and applies his energies to it so strenuously that he knows very little else. Were his governor chafferer qualities would be dwarfed, and Earl would stand for good roads and very little else.

Mr. Earl is all right where he is, and we hope the next governor will keep him there.

Simply Bad Politics.

We have on several occasions explicitly stated that we were not opposed to Fred M. Warner as a candidate for a third term because of any objections to Gov. Warner. Should Governor Warner carry the primaries there is no sackcloth, and ashes for the SENTINEL and no crow for its editor. We base our opposition to him upon the grounds of political expediency.

The point has been raised that the result of the primaries will be but a reflex of what is to follow in November,—should he lose in the primaries the matter will be settled; should he carry the primaries he must necessarily win in November. The two elections are not necessarily correlative.

There are several weeks between the primaries and the election, and the republicans of Michigan should not be compelled to fight a defensive battle. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

We firmly believe that the most available and by far the strongest candidate before the people of Michigan today is Mr. Bradley.

He is an avowed candidate, yet he is not a spellbinder. He is not burning up gasoline or paying large livery bills. He does not claim to be the champion of any class legislation or the fountain head of all the prosperous blessings that are so fervently prayed for.

Mr. Bradley is a well equipped man, worthy in all respects of the high honor.

REASONING OF CHILDISH MIND.

Little One Thought She Recognized the Work of Papa.

A short time ago a surgeon had three leg amputations in a week. This unusual number caused talk in the surgeon's household, and his little daughter, Dorothy, was greatly interested. A few days after the last operation the surgeon's wife and little Dorothy were rummaging in the attic in a trunk was found a daguerreotype depicting a girl about eight years of age. The portrait, through a peculiarity of pose, showed only one leg of the subject, the other being doubled up under her.

"Whose picture is that, mamma?" asked Dorothy.

"Mine. It was taken when I was a child not much older than you are now."

"Did you know papa then?"

"No, dear. Why do you ask?"

"I thought maybe you did 'cause you've got only one leg."—The Tribune.

Habitual Criminals.

Most crimes—thefts, burglaries, assaults, etc.—are committed by a small number of professional criminals. They adopt crime as a career. It is their means of livelihood. They are caught, sent to prison and return when they come out to the same lawless career. They become so expert that they commit many crimes before they are caught. In prison they are artful hypocrites, becoming quite assiduous and earning good characters from the governor and chaplain—in order to get out sooner.—Lloyd's News.

Favors Woman Suffrage.

In Holland where qualified women have long had municipal suffrage, the committee on revision of the constitution has reported in favor of giving women proportional representation and making them eligible to parliament.

Awkward Language.

Japanese typists have their troubles. K. Sugisura, library editor of the Tokyo Asahi Shimbun, says that he especially admires the linotype machines. "Unfortunately we are unable to use them in Japan, for our language has 47 letters, as well as 2,000 Chinese characters, and such a number of types is, of course, beyond the capabilities of any machine yet invented. In the printing office of our newspaper in Tokyo the compositor must often walk the whole length of the room to fetch one character, instead of standing in one place before a single case, as the English or American compositors can do."

No limitation of mind can prevent accidents from occurring to people who will not use their common sense and who do not know what it is to be vigilant in their actions. It only remains for the curiously inclined to be made to realize their individual responsibilities before accidents will be as rare on the roads as on the railways.—Automobile Journal.

In Paris the smart women have adopted the artificial flower almost universally, and it is used constantly by preference to real blooms. These flowers are pinned to the lapels of tailor made gowns.

The costumes are those you find among the fishermen and the summer visitors. The story is natural, original, thrilling and interesting from first to last, and has not one idea borrowed from any other play that was ever written. Webster has been entitled to the complete and elaborate staging of this, the grandest of all plays of the Eastern coast. At the Charlevoix Theater one night Wednesday Aug. 12.

CAPT. "TIP" MILLER.

The Brave Old Life Saver in Charlevoix.—Will Move Here.

Capt. Harrison Miller, recently retired from the U. S. life saving service, is in town, and with him is the lady who has shared his joys and sorrows for nearly fifty years.

Capt. Miller was born the year 1834 Tippecanoe Harrison was elected president, and so they named the kid Harrison, with the honorary cognomen of "Tip". He was here through all the Mormon troubles, and probably knows more of the inside history of that brief period of excitement than any other living man.

Capt. Miller has been forty years in the government service, as lighthouse or life saving station keeper. In the latter service his position has been unique. He never served below the rank of keeper. He was first appointed keeper of the Beaver Island volunteer station, and has held that rank ever since.

He is as well as he ever was, but failing eye sight rules him out with two years pay, and the cordial respect of his superiors. His seventy years sit lightly on him.

Capt. Miller will live in Charlevoix, and is already looking about for a home. He wants to spend the remainder of his life near the bluff overlooking Lake Michigan,—where he can hear the splash of the surf and the roar of the northwester. Tip says that if there is a wreck hereabouts he will be there if he has to go out in a skiff.

The hardy old veteran has earned a rest, but we doubt very much if he can be kept off the beach, any more than an old fire horse can be held when the gong rings.

Covell Stock Rising.

Reliable information is to the effect that Geo. G. Covell, in his campaign for Congress is still gaining strength in all parts of the district.

Mr. Covell is this week traveling through the southern counties, and is very much encouraged by the outlook.

The long experience of Mr. Covell in public affairs; his training and natural acquirements; his growth into public life from its home environment; his genial and companionable nature and his unimpeachable character as a man, all commend him to the voters of the 11th district as an ideal candidate for congress.

If Geo. G. Covell goes to congress, and he will, the 11th district will have a representative who will do something besides wear a prince Albert coat and look wise.

The departments will hear from him, and the things will be done. Our reason for this conclusion is that we know Geo. G. Covell. We know him to be a strenuous worker. He will take into the office of congressman the same loyalty to the district that he takes into court for his client, and that loyalty is a tradition in this region.

Mr. Dodds in Town.

Frank N. Dodds, of Mt. Pleasant, a candidate in the coming primaries for the congressional nomination, and the only competitor of Geo. G. Covell, was in town two days last week, and made the SENTINEL a very pleasant and friendly call.

Mr. Dodds is a man whom every republican can loyally support if he gets the nomination. There is no question about his ability or personal character. If he receives a majority of the votes in the primaries the SENTINEL is in good shape to contribute its efforts toward the election of a republican congressman from the 11th district.

But we continue to reason that Northern Michigan should stand by Mr. Covell in this contest. We believe, all things considered, that it is for the best interests of Charlevoix county that Mr. Covell should be the next congressman.

We believe Mr. Covell is more closely identified with Northern Michigan interests than his competitor. We believe he understands Northern Michigan conditions and needs better than his competitor, and that is why we are supporting him.

But we believe Mr. Covell has a competitor who is a "foeman worthy of his steel."

A Political Vendetta

By

WELDON J. COBB

THIS is a new and engaging work of fiction from the pen of a popular western author. It is a story of the hour and deals with the themes and incidents of every-day national life as we find it about us. It is a story that goes into the depths of tragedy and rises to the heights of strong emotion. It is sentient with powerful humanity. Its central figure is such a man as has been the model theme of many a timely pen. The heroine is a lovely girl whom circumstance and fate arm with the power to meet her destiny with a strong devotion that gilds this great story with rare closeness to the truth and courage of a noble nature.

The political element of the story is well devised and handled in a masterly manner, showing how the field of politics is one that can be used to advantage to themselves and disadvantage to others, by schemers who know how to control the voters of a community. The timeliness of the theme will appeal to all readers, who at the present time are interested in the great national issues now so prominently before the public.

The reader will find this serial very entertaining in its details and its plot motive is strong and intensely dramatic. We commend the story for its peculiar originality of treatment and the satisfactory ending, while true worth is rewarded and the plots of the schemer defeated. All should read it. It is a rare work of fiction.

CHAPTER I.

The newspapers had published columns concerning his mysterious scandalous and proud his picture there without number. Friends and acquaintances had searched everywhere for him, and the police, official, powerful, omnipresent, had brought into play all its efficient machinery—for, back of the impelling motive was the scandal, the disclosure, the influence of the unauthorized of a great political "boss," Gilbon Hope.

It was Gilbon Hope's brother, Everett Hope, aged 25, lately, longest on the threshold of smiling yet majestic manhood, who had dropped from view as though absolutely blotted out of existence. He had seemed well—like a bird in the air. A moment he was there, a vibrant breath in desert wastes. In the midst of hurrying, jostling, in the very heart of the mighty metropolis, he found daylight, he had vanished in some mysterious down that had buried, had obliterated his company! From a certain public street car, he, at a definite hour and minute, he had been lost to the world. Friends, relatives and those who are close to motive, where shown or no, felt a shock, felt a wave of grief, felt a wave of strength, courage and character—these Hopes. Gilbon had come to the city twelve years before, a lonely, lonesome boy of the hills from the northern rolling mills district, it was said. Rumor had it, that he was of a family long known king of industry, he had dropped with falling fortunes into the pit of hard, casual labor. He had the air, the appearance, the dignity of a man, who with equal grace and defiance could deal an evil stroke that would split a twelve-inch beam, or clasp a diamond bracelet and the dainty curve of a duchess.

Gilbon had become the timekeeper for a great iron plant in the city, and its superintendent, and then a man with a commanding presence, an extraordinary salary—the owner, the directing magnate, who hired or discharged all employes at will. One morning station he found the opposite side of municipal affairs by marching upon some hundred laborers in the pits and voting them as one man. Therefore, he had led the Democratic party in the hollow of his hands—a giant playing with a giantess. Hence, was he, the man, central, center, of the most formidable political organization that ever controlled the destinies of a great commonwealth.

Politics had paid him, asked for no reward, seemingly, he demanded no office. With his strong mind, his commanding presence, he was content to lurk sinister, at the back of every political movement, to hold the strings that controlled men and millions—his purposes. His word was his—his will unquestioned.

This man, with his hard, hard face and cross, cold-blood manner, was the one tender spot in his nature—his brother, Everett. His friends had noted his cold eye flicker when he spoke of him. When, later, he introduced young Hope to a fair, delicate flaxed-haired youth, all politeness and courtesy—a strange contrast to himself—there were pride in his eye and fondness in his voice, it was inconceivable that they could be of kin, so widely dissimilar were they.

And now, upon this fond brother, disappeared every hope, lavished all the affection of a deep, repressive nature. He had invested the wires of the telephone, he had set the steam the world could see Everett Hope in the portals of success and the commonwealth of a million souls. He marked out his plan like setting the stakes for a political campaign, initiating familiarity with business men and business ways, preparing for a great trust establishment, where Gilbon had the profit in place, where the world, secretly, and then—one, clearness, annihilation, the Everett was a man.

It was in pursuance of this plan that, as a fair beginning, Everett Hope had undertaken the simple duties of a commercial reporter, entering the service of the great Transcript Agency. His routine would draw him among mighty and powerful men, the men of means and the men struggling to keep alive the pulse of the enterprises upon which hung the fortunes of some direct plan child, one night, after noon in July, Everett Hope was in the trolleys and nonrapid flats.

If Gilbon Hope felt the terror and anxiety of that awful week, when police, detectives, and the world searched for a hideous discovery, he showed it not.

The city was flooded with the passion and order of a great political boss. Within the limits of twenty-four hours was the rule of the dominant wing of the party. A scheme was been proceeded and consummated, and the eye of every "boss," or of every seek of pots, was fixed on the political arm, the association of twenty influential politicians, to cause carry the ticket by storm.

He had superb confidence in his ability. His eye was awake, every sense on the keen alert. He sat waiting for his coming much caused him to turn.

"What?" he said, sharply, as though, dagger thrust had sundered his study, for "bad disaster" in the interruption.

His hands trembled slightly, and a dull pallor wrenched his frame of lips. It was his friend, the chief of police, who stood by his side.

"You told me to come—at any time, you know," he stammered apologetically. "Yes! yes!" half whispered Gideon, his tone quite eager and harsh, cracked and dry.

"We've found out something."

"What?"

The query came with pistol-shot quickness.

"No, rather, we have found somebody."

"Whom?"

The word was a hollow gasp.

"Your brother."

Gilbon Hope swayed—then, recovering, set stiff, erect again.

"Dead?"

"Dead."

"Where—where? Tell me!"

The hope in the hall was in riot. The chairman was pounding with his gavel—what were they, the interests of politics, the guidance of a commonwealth, to this man? At that supreme moment? Some men were tumbling over chairs and tables to reach their leader.

"Tell me!" again said he, facing his area on the grave-faced chief, with a murmur.

The official bent over—whispered into Gilbon Hope's shrinking ear. The great political boss covered like a child and hid his white face in his nervous, powerless hands.

Hope 2d.

"Quick—are you daft, man?" Gilbon Hope lifted his head with his side, pouring into his ear the vital announcement that the question of the hour had been put, and the opposition were pressing their speedy.

"Check the stampede—up on your feet, man—your old self!" panted a breathless correspondent, "for the day is lost."

They tore away Gilbon's shielding arms, revealing a face grown gray, and dusky, and old in a moment. His gaze was vacant, unencompassing. He stood out one hand and seized them aside.

"He's stricken, gentlemen," explained the chief, in a low tone—"he's heard bad news, sad news."

"What's that to yonder mob?" howled a palpitating alderman. "Are we rabble—are we fools? Our cause and he could have stayed the tide! And now——"

A yell like that of a pack of hungry, victorious wolves rent the air. The opposition had split the party. Gilbon Hope's power was gone—he was buried deep—tribes deeper, the oblivion of disrepute and neglect, in a single moment. Never again to lift his face with its cold proud expression as king and leader—never again to raise his voice in eloquent defense of party principles.

He walked from the hall like a man of a dream, forever haunted with the horrible picture the whispered words of the chief of police had conjured up.

For that official had told him that they had found upon the massive steel door of the vault of the cosies, exploded Comedian Edward Silver Company, to find one secret—Dead, murdered Everett Hope!

This week's sermon

PAID AT GOD'S EXPENSE.

By George Clark Peck, D. D.

Reader, have you ever thought of the things which are Caesar's and unto God the things which be God's—Luke xx. 25.

Not to pay Paul by robbing Peter, nor yet to pay Peter by robbing Paul, but to discharge with fidelity both obligations—such is the eternal sanity of Christ's Gospel. Commercial prudence advises us to pay whatever creditor process must hereby, whether Peter or Paul, Jesus commands us to pay both.

The best thing that religion does for man is to enlarge his treasury, and obliterate whatever Esther religious darkens the sanctity of all duty; only such disciple is equal ethically to two worlds. I have heard of a lady who refused a few pennies in order that he might assail the missionary boxes of his Sunday-school class. And there were times ago in which such was the prevailing style of religious liberality. Men ran away from all manner of human duties in order that they might fulfill the divine behest. The world was full of children of the Alcyone, who neglected that they might discharge their full debt to heaven only by pearling contempt upon the secular things of earth. In a time of some things native fashions people used to say Dan Rice's circus.

I scarcely need to affirm that modern sentiment has swung to the opposite extreme. In this day we commonly pay Peter by robbing Paul. They are only a little more than even, with a change in the victim. If the former generation sinned in the direction of Peter, and sometimes its own merchal honor in the interest of prayer, the present generation sometimes shortens its prayers for the sake of devotion to business. In the words of the scripture, Caesar is paid at the expense of God.

Faithfulness is not an are of a single. It is rather a whole circle. No man is just in his obligations to his brother by paying his grower's bill. Nor can we meet God's claim to being merely generous to spirit, fervent in word sinners and good natured in the domestic circle. Commercial uprightness is no better substitute for neglect of God than a one-sided cultivation of soul is an excuse for neglected business dealings. To be truly Christian is to endeavor to meet all just claims, to pay Paul without robbing Peter, to render unto Caesar all his due tribute, yet not to fail of the tribute of God.

The financial secretary of a certain church, in a recent address, pleaded the society's books down to his place of business. And he spoke of his fellow employees. I doubt if he were guilty of any intentional injustice, but he was never unfeasible how one man can earn two salaries at the same time and for the same time; how he can justly rob Peter to pay Paul. But the world is full of men and women who thus earn double salaries. Some of them steal a minute time to earn God's wages, and a very, tinsel of them are taking God's time to earn man's wages. Paul pays Peter, and Peter pays Paul, in order to pay him. What a city that a man should spend a minute of God's time in his fortune that he should have no time left to make his soul!

THE WORTH WHILE WAY.

By Rev. Frank W. Cope.

"I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."—2 Tim. iv. 7.

It is a splendid thing at the end of life to be able to look back upon the place thing of time so you were confident of intention to do it at the beginning. Sometimes that reverse is satisfactory as its prospect was inspiring. Long before the end we see that they took ways in which we might have done better, and so we all there must often consider the grave question: What are the things most worth striving for in life? It is a question that we never ask. Am I getting the prizes really worth the gaining?

Very purposeful life gains some prize; the puzzling question is as to whether it is the most desirable prize or merely valuable. Popular opinion points to the fame and honors; but experience warns of the price to be paid for them. It would be folly to pretend that they go always to the most worthy. You do not have to look far at any time to find the commonplace man with the magnificent fortune. Often the richest man in the poorest kine of a man. At any rate it is certain that you cannot pursue that prize with singleness of purpose without the sacrifice of every other desirable thing.

Then, even conscious, choose character as the prize to be sought. But a man stops to count the cost. While it is true that he can never be better than he is character and in cash, the business are sometimes so much more than pure gains. Sure enough, the pure gain is not established by poverty, neither is it by wealth. Many a fellow who seek character regard adversity and poverty, imagine that they would be lodestars on the way, the goal alone is to them essential. One world of thoughtful people at a failure's effort that leaves no legacy of fitness, while yet many men seem to imagine that success is to be measured by treasure of the soul alone. Who will show us the right way?

A certain answer comes from one of the world's wisest and best. Paul, mighty in command, dead poor and in poverty, will be glad, gladly reach out course that had such an end. In fetter, he saw that the way long lens right. He might have taken many other ways. So potent a personality would have found prosperity and honor. Yet he deliberately chose the way of service for spiritual things. He accepted the hardships, loss, privations, prisons and death, and rejected the possibilities of easy wealth and fame. At the end, having mastered all the dangers of the way, he commends it to his young friend Timothy. The path of service for humanity, the fight against sin and wrong, the steadfastness of faith and truth and right, these are the ways worth while things in life.

But was Paul right? In any life patterned after his Master's, any life that counts the inner joys, the glories of service, the rewards of character as no gramme, and so misses the treasures for which the many strive, a success?

Let history answer. Is it fame we seek; there were a thousand famous nights, successful men in imperial Rome when Paul, from his prison, wrote these words. Well might they have despised the poor prisoner had they even heard of him. Yet who now disturbs the name of one of those great ones? And who is there has not heard of and reverence that poor, despised prisoner? Even much more is all this time concerning the forty man of Christ.

Let our own hearts answer. Is it riches we seek; wealth, all prosperity without power or heart? Can money ever buy comfort, content, or sympathy? Money is to be measured by its earning power, the interest accruing in liquidation of its sinking fund. Is it the things you hold in your hand depends on the review of your life. This you may think this world would be the better place and life the wealthier for an all if it only seeking the things of heaven, truth and right and holiness love and service, seeking to see more clear and to serve their fellows? That would not mean a race of apostles; it would mean a more equitable distribution of wealth and honor and power fortunes. Deep in all our hearts we know that life is the only infallible path alone given power; its intangible prizes alone are permanent; its service alone is rich; further, the soul, the one asset we can carry with us into eternity, is only to be gain while it is safe to leave to others.

COMMERCE AND CHRISTIANITY.

By Rev. R. S. Storrs, D. D.

Yes, our missionary work needs commerce. This is not our first work, but it is a work which goes on with the growth of trade, and is spread over the earth. For commerce and the Gospel are to be surrounded by the Christ, that the ship of each is essential, in curiously-enduring; and, it may be said that the ship of each is the ship of Christ, that she "lugeth the beams of her chambers in the waters and walketh upon the wings of the wind." There is no virtue so recent or so student, no idea so fantastic or so practical, but the Gospel does not seek it, and that commerce, will not gladly reach out for it or seeses to it. They go together. The home of commerce is on the liquid ocean; the home of the Gospel is on the land. Commerce is the business of the world, and

THE WINNING TICKET.

Taft and Sherman on a Republican Platform.

STRONG AND SAFE LEADERS.

Both Candidates Are Men of Marked Ability and Wide Experience—Why They Should Command the Support of Conservative Voters.

"Taft and Sherman" is considered the winning ticket not only by all Republicans, but by thousands of Democrats in every state of the Union. It is believed that the ticket is the strongest that could possibly have been nominated. Mr. Taft's career in his public and private life and his every official act has been such that there will not be a word of apology or defense necessary during the campaign. Never has a branch of scandal been connected with his private or official life, and never has he made a mistake that will need explanation or defense in the coming weeks before election.

While he had the president's indorsement and help in saloing the nomination, still it cannot be claimed that he is any man's tool, but will be absolutely independent and carry out to the full what seems to him best in every issue that may arise during his stay at the White House. While he will be a large degree continue to strive to perpetuate the policies of the present administration, yet he will act at all times and in all circumstances simply from the viewpoint of what is any consider best and wisest for the government and for the people.

Congressman Sherman, who, though not so widely known as Mr. Taft perhaps is yet a national character who will need no introduction to the people. For twenty years he has served in congress with marked ability, being one of the most able parliamentarians among our public men and, besides having a judicial mind and such experience in banking and business life as to make his counsel and standing up congress second only to that of Mr. Taft himself.

The nomination of Mr. Sherman insures the state of New York to the Republican ticket and means the election of perhaps fifteen or twenty Republican congressmen whose district before the convention seemed in doubt.

The ticket is a well balanced one in every way, and as the qualifications of the candidates and their ideas as to the issues before the people become better and better known it is believed that the ticket will grow stronger and stronger as the weeks go by until that every state carried by the Republicans four years ago will again be for it in the same columns on the 3d of November next.

Not only is Mr. Taft's fitness for the office to which it is believed he will be elected to be considered, but his position upon various subjects which cannot exactly be called issues is so well known that they will to a large extent influence the conservative voter. For instance, it is believed that during the next four years some four or five members of the supreme court may be named, and the general rule must be adhered to if all other things be equal, the selection should be appointed by Mr. Taft or Mr. Bryan. Mr. Taft himself has not only occupied a high position in the courts of the United States but has been a student of as a member of the supreme court, and it is likely that for one so well qualified to be declaring that it be was by far the better man to sign on the appointments to that most important body.

The question of a foreign war is always in the minds of the people of the nation, and in Taft, even a man of peace, a man of God, a man of diplomacy, of a calm, judicial temperament, should be at the head of a nation rather than a man of fads and follies and without the power to ever control himself.

Of the living issues it can be said that the position of both candidates is well known as regards the tariff question. Mr. Taft is for a revision of the tariff upon such lines as will not tend to upset the employment of a single American workman. Mr. Bryan is for a revision of the tariff that would add to vast foreign importations of goods that would displace American manufactures, resulting in idleness of millions of workingmen and a reduction of wages in every factory and mill in the United States.

In financial matters there is hardly any comparison to be made. Mr. Taft is for an honest dollar, is for the gold standard and for maintaining the honesty and integrity of national finances in domestic as well as foreign relations. Mr. Bryan, while he admits that the free coinage of silver is no longer an issue, yet maintains that he is right on that subject, and no doubt if ever the chance came and he could have his way our finances would go to a silver basis and to a fifty cent dollar.

But perhaps, after all, the one great thing to be considered is that Taft and Sherman are Republicans and will stand upon the platform of their party and will point to their party's record in the past and to what it will do in the future, and the voter must contrast this position with the Democratic platform and party record. Parties are greater than men, and principles are greater than great leaders. The voter must decide between the Republican party and its candidates and the Democratic party and its candidates.

Easy Mistake to Make.

Premier Andrews says that he made a mistake last week in stating that his wife had died of cancer. The item should have read that he had a wife by laudanum. These things happen occasionally, and we are always glad to correct them. It is easy to get women and cows mixed up.—Hamilton (Ont.) Spectator.

LUCKY BEAN SAVED SAILOR

Providence Placed Talisman in His Hand When He Was Thrown Unconscious Among Cannibals.

Of all the many mysterious products of the ocean, none can compare with the tea-bean. Scientists are divided as to its origin, as no one has ever seen the shrub or vine on which it grows, and it is never found save when the bottom of the deep has been rent by a hard storm, when the tea-beans, cast forth from some mysterious depth, are found scattered along the beach, derelicts of the tide. There are numerous varieties, large and small, and some are very rare, especially the large liver bean, and the banded bean. The savage tribes which inhabit the South Seas regard them as almost sacred, and look upon the lucky possessor of one of the rare varieties as particularly favored by the gods. Dusky belles, having in their possession these rare products of the deep, will fight for their treasure against all comers, as they believe that the sea-bean gives them unusual power, especially in love, and that any man on whom their affections are set, must yield to their charms if they last touch him with the lucky bean. One touch of the bean binds their lover to them forever.

Mr. Leah, manager of the Starislaus county exhibit cars from California, is the fortunate possessor of a rare specimen which has a thrilling history which would seem to prove the superstition of the savages of the South Sea Islands. It was given to him by a sailor friend, who was wrecked in a mighty storm which swept the tropical sea. The sailor, unconscious and nearly dead, was washed ashore on an island, and when he recovered his senses he found himself surrounded by a crowd of savage men and women. They carried him, and his fate would undoubtedly have been a horrible one, but suddenly a native saw grasped in the sailor's hand, one of the rarest of the sea-beans. Where it came from and how it happened that he had it on his was could not open the beach he ... or knew, but the superstition navigators looked upon him as one who was protected by the gods, and the bean proved to him a lucky one indeed for it undoubtedly saved him from a terrible fate. Some years are Mr. Leak befriended this old sailor in San Francisco, and as a reward this lucky bean was presented to him, and he values it highly. "I am not superstitious," said Mr. Leak in speaking of this bean, which he has had made into a watch charm, "but I have not had any very bad luck since I was possessed with the lucky bean by my old sailor friend Seth."

CAUSED BY LACK OF THOUGHT.

Cruelty Most Frequently Inflicted in Carelessness.

Most of the cruelty of the world is thought less cruelty. Very few people will intentionally add to another's load or make his burden in life heavier or his path rougher. Most of the great heart-wounds are inflicted by a man out of sorrow, when, perhaps, we were too proud to apologize or to try to be of the grievous wounds we had made. Too heedless to take the trouble to encourage a soul who is struggling to do his best, or, too, to throw an stumbling blocks in the path of those who are trying to win the world's greatest prize? No life is lost the same after you have once touched it. With you leave a ray of light or a ray of despair, a flash of light or a ray of despair, a flash of light or a ray of despair, a flash

MAN RETURNS TO KILL WIFE.

Louis Armour, a Horse Jockey, Tries Fatal Shot at Weston.

Mrs. Ella Armour, aged 45, was shot down by her husband, Louis Armour, a horse jockey, who returned after an absence of nearly seven years to kill her. Mrs. Armour had just started to church when her husband came in Toledo, Ohio, when Armour stepped up behind a small first three shots at his wife. One had only one effect, entering the woman's head below the right ear and penetrating the brain, and she died in the minutes. After setting his purpose accomplished Armour pulled another weapon from his pocket and holding the muzzle to his temple, pulled the trigger. The revolver failed to work, however, and Armour then walked down the street and escaped. It is said also that the man fired a shot at Miss Dessie Shoe, his daughter, who accompanied her mother, but the bullet missed its mark. Armour left his wife sixteen years ago, traveling over the country as a horse jockey and trainer. He returned a month ago and discussed his wife with friends with him. She refused and he disappeared, only to return last week to Toledo. No trace of Armour has been found and the police think he may have done away with himself.

Now that America has returned a portion of the Boxer indemnity, China should send an envoy to Washington for the purpose of conveying the thanks of the government for this act. Therefore let Tang Shao-Yi receive the rank of president of the government board and proceed to the United States." QUEBEC'S TERCENTENARY.

SOME OF THE EPISODES IN THE HISTORY OF THE SEAT OF THE AMERICAN COMMERCE.

Three hundred years ago Samuel de Champlain, the French explorer, found at the settlement of Quebec. In commemoration of the tercentenary of the city of Quebec has been having the great est celebration in its history and one of the gr dest ever held in the New World. The entire city gave itself to festivities for six days and Canadians of both British and French ancestry joined in making the event one to be remembered.

The celebration was attended by the prince of Wales by representatives from all the principal governments and by the greatest collection of warships comprising English, French and American vessels, that ever gathered in Quebec, Lawrence river. The United States was represented by Vice President Fairbanks and three of the Cabinet, Secretary Bonaparte, Secretary Metcalf and Secretary Wilson, who were hinge and nearly pageants, fetes, military parades and naval pageants occupied both day and night. The celebration was attended by nearly all Canada, and thousands of Americans and Europeans gathered from the various foreign countries in which their lines made their homes.

Impressive Ceremonies.

The formal ceremonies on the shore of the St Lawrence and his assertion of the spot on which Quebec, the first settlement in Canada, was founded, 300 years ago, produced A great historical pageant which was given, illustrated floats representing the leading events in the history of Quebec. Prominent among the floats were those representing Champlain, Wolfe and Montcalm, and probably, too, a colonial statue symbolizing peace. Both English and French were contributing liberally to this project, and King Edward months ago sent a handsome donation. More than $50,000 has been subscribed.

The Victor at Quebec.

The figure of James Wolfe, the young English general who lost his life in his attack on Quebec, is one of the most interesting in American annals. In history he will go down as "the man who changed the destiny of North America." He was the victor at the battle of Ville Marie, or Montreal, on Sept. 13, 1759, and the victor at Quebec, where he died, on the Plains of Abraham, on the same day. Wolfe's fame is due to his bravery of the highest order. He was a soldier of the first rank, and his victories were brilliant and decisive. The battle of Quebec was the culminating point of the great struggle between the English and French for the mastery of the continent. Wolfe was a young man, and his death in his thirty-third year and though the capture of Quebec was his greatest exploit, he already had given evidence of a genius for arms, of a capacity for leading men and of personal qualities of energy. Had his life been spared he would have placed himself in the front rank of the great military leaders of the world.

Wolfe's Parlous Scheme.

A most paradoxical nature thus Wolfe's scarcely can be imagined. He was a man of iron and stern, cold and philosophical in turn. He had a spirit of commendable his inflexibility and enthusiasm to his men in a way that made them irresistible in action. What made them more perfect fool-hardiness in other men in Wolfe was tempered by prudence.

Soon, after the fall of Louisbourg, Wolfe became tired of inaction on Quebec, and he proposed a bold stroke against Quebec. It seemed a rash and foolhardy plan, but Wolfe was known as one of the most strongly fortified points on the continent, garrisoned by a large force, 15,000 of whom were the pick of the French soldiers in America, under the command of Montcalm, an able leader and a brave man. But, little daunted, Wolfe, with Prime Minister Pitt, his chief, began to lay siege to the city. Artillery was brought up and bombardment was begun, but it proved an, but with little effect on Montcalm, who was well protected behind his ramparts.

Wolfe quickly realized that he could accomplish little by siege, and that he must do something to induce Montcalm to give battle in the open. He began an attack on the French with marauding parties, demoralizing the city meanwhile, but his plans were not carried out, and he found himself at his wits' end. Soon after this he was taken ill, and remained in his tent for some weeks, too weak to move. However, when September came, he rallied upon a plan in spite of his weakness.

A note was a half stone tablet he had discovered a little over valley Anse-au-Foulon, now known as Wolfe's Cove. He found that the place was guarded by a certain Capt de Vergor, with a force of Canadians, who were inspired of keeping guard. Wolfe resolved to make this his landing point. On the evening of September 12 he quietly landed 1500 men on both sides forced down the river with the ship drifting beneath the forts under the cover of darkness. The landing was made at Anse-du-Foulon, the canals were overpowered and morning found the title roll line of British troops drawn up two deep in battle array on the Plains of Abraham, so named after an old royal tilt yard, named Abraham Martin.

The Defeat of Montcalm.

Montcalm was fairly stunned by the audacity of Wolfe's move, but, confidently turned out to give battle to the victor. Wolfe's force to wipe his adversary off the map. Montcalm was in his tent when the news came, and he hurried over on his horse, galloping through the camp. He was a man of iron, and he was well protected behind his ramparts.

MANY DROWN IN TUNNEL.

23 Workmen Bricks Subterranean Stream and Are Overwhelmed.

In a frightful accident only the other morning in the Lenschberg tunnel in the Bernese Alps, twenty-three Italian workmen were killed. The men were drilling inside the tunnel when their tools pierced water and set against them from a subterranean river or lake, the existence of which was not known. The wall gave way with a crash and a torrent of water and mud rushed into the tunnel and filled it. All of the workmen were drowned. The disaster occurred 2,600 yards from the northern entrance. It is believed that the men tapped the Kander river, which flows through the mountains above the tunnel.

NEW POLITICAL PARTY.

Western Farmers Are Taking Steps for Organization.

The organization of a new political party throughout the south and west is being considered by the leaders of the Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union of America, which counts members in the United States at the present time, and which, it is said, will be expected to interest the labor unions in the proposed new party.

The initiative steps in the organizing of the new party are now being taken. Consideration and discussion by the leaders of the movement are being had at the gathering of farmer union members and their friends at picnics throughout Oklahoma, in particular. Politics in all its phases is being discussed, especially the issues of the one and only planks being utilized are anti-trust.

The Democrats and Republicans are among the leaders in all these farmer movements, so far as the west and southwest are concerned, the most prominent Populist leaders of 10 or 12 years ago may now be found organizing and advocating the union of the farmers.

TEXAS RANCH PASSING.

Great Tracts Rapidly Being Cut Into Small Farms.

The land of Texas is rapidly being cut into small farms, and a few years will see the end of the big ranch. The ranch is being cut up into small tracts for sale after mile in Lubbock, Hockley and Cochran counties, which will make a person or seeing a habitation. These old frontier sections are filling up at astonishing rapidly.

This is a 12 mile strip of a tract of 15,000 to 50,000 acres being sold, lock, stock and barrel, and it is being cut up into more desired than a rancher would sell in Eastern Texas. The prices of deals are growing less and less, and the cost of the 50,000-acre tract is only a small.

The Heredity of Hair.

Gertrude Ford Charles Davenport, connected with the Carnegie Institution's station at Cold Spring Harbor, N. Y., writing in the American Naturalist of the results of their observations on the "Heredity of Hair Forms in Man." It is more possible to predict from the hair of parents in a family, whether straight, wavy, curly or frizzy, than it is to predict whether it will be most invariable. "You may hatred parents, all straight, and have a family of haired children, but the chances of curly or wavy children are small. Parents may have children with either straight, wavy or curly hair, but straight haired children offspring will probably be large."

In connection with the court decisions in New York City, enacting street railway franchises, with compulsory and allowing new plan of operation without regard to the payment of future years of dividends, the Wall Street Summary says: "It will be interesting to see if there will be a public service corporation in this country, which will make an economic service to the public ordinary. The rate of earnings of a public service corporation before dividends or any return on the capital invested, and consequently shifts, from poverty, owing to mismanagement of any sides, seems to be unable to, which is unworthy to have a franchise.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Petoskey News: It is with joyful and unanimous acclaim that the Resorter and News Staff and the Churchill Printery force extends to Mrs. Frank Fonctman a vote of thanks for a basket full of delicious club sandwiches, direct from the Grill Cafe's cuisine.

Northern Michigan certainly has a mushroom town of 500 or 600 people living in tents. They are there for the huckleberries but everything seems like a Fourth celebration. There are three bowery dances, a restaurant, two stores, a barber shop, and a gambling den. The name of this place is Naples and it is not quite 18 miles from Kalkaska. Eleven huckleberry lumpers are at the camp but there are not very many berries sold. The people dance all night and one fiddling two miles distant from the village, could hear the dances called out and the clapping of hands and shouting. The people pick just enough in the daytime to dance all night and pay their gambling debts. Revolver and other shooting irons are far from unknown.—Traverse City Record.

The Petoskey Daily Resorter has two special correspondents at Bay View and Walloon Lake, during the resort season, to look after and keep track of the new arrivals, and chronicle other items of interest. There reporters, both of them are not of the conventional type, and learnedly discuss all sorts of topics from original sin on the influence of the Zarthoc star upon their respective resorts and resorters, as well as upon the fish. All this seems to pass muster all right with the responsible editor of the paper. But one day last week one of the unconventional reporters, thinking probably to be more complimentary than usual, referred to one of the guests at the most fashionable hotels as a "lousy louse." The next day there was an explanation and an apology by the editor, with the thread that if the reporter did not mend his ways, and do better he would be "killed for the next break of this kind.

Petoskey special. A drowning accident at Walloon lake yesterday afternoon caused a gloom to be cast over the resort. Mrs. Ralph Harris of Kansas City, Mo., and her little daughter were fishing from the dock when the child fell in and the mother apparently jumped in to rescue her, not knowing that the water, which is very clear, was deep enough to drown her. The discovery was made when the body of Mrs. Harris was seen floating on the water, and then by laying down on the dock searchers saw the body of the child on the bottom of the lake. Mr. Harris, who is a prominent real estate broker and capitalist of Kansas City, was with his family, but happened to be some distance away when the accident happened. When told of the occurence he became frantic and it was feared for a time that his reason was gone. He was immediately placed under the care of a physician. Mrs. Harris was the daughter of a prominent banker of Leavenworth, Kan. The bodies will be taken home for burial.

Shopper Got the Best.

Not all young matrons are so unsophisticated as is the custom any "Mrs. Newlywed" of the newspaper humorists. One striking exception resides in Harmon.

Entering a butcher shop on the eve of a large house party to be given at her home, she displayed a discriminating eye.

"Please pick me out a half dozen chickens that are tough!" she said. "I want to give my guests a treat."

The butcher put aside seven.

"Are these all?" she asked.

"Yes, that completes the lot. "These are all tough ones."

"Then send the other five to my house at once," said the young matron.

The butcher is guessing still.

The Woman Who Gambles.

Statistics say that the number of gaming makes women wifty. It is not necessary to take the word of the moralists for that. Gin slings does not make women ugly. It makes them, and it is of that that they must be warned. It is natural enough, since they play passionately, and in playing they forget the world and their faces. So much the worse for those who do so. Zanetta has lorn a beautiful face while players of old grief faces the animal condition of who can be revealed by the excitement of play.

—C. D. Danaher, of Chicago, Ill., who for some time has been a holder of stock in the Charlevoix State Savings Bank, was in the city Saturday. In conversation with Cashier Bachow the editor learned that H. P. Foley, president, Mr. Bachow, Sydney T. Waters and A. T. Slaght, purchased the holdings of Mr. Danaher. —Miss Ethel Cook, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, died at her home in this city early Monday morning, of valvular heart trouble, aged 21 years. —A mid-day fire alarm called out the department Tuesday to quench a fire in a shed adjoining L. S. Scott's store in the rear. One of their number gives added interest to the program by readings and impersonations. Watch for fuller announcements later.

—They have a resort college base ball team city of Owosso. They came over here Saturday and tackled Lew Adams' Charlevoix team. They went home wiser and very subdued. They were downed not in a score of 5 to 1. Tuesday the boys clinched again and the college chaps came off the field with a good wholesome respect for the Charlevoix team, for they were trimmed up again 7 to 4. Bring on some more of your fancy diamond artists. Our fellows say their opponents were bully fellows.

—Mr. E. S. Musselam, the Egyptian rug merchant in the Theater building, delivered a lecture at the home of Mrs. John C. Nye, Friday evening, on "Egypt." Mr. Musselam is a very intelligent native Egyptian, and his talk was very entertaining. Mrs. Nye made the occasion an evening party, embracing a large number of friends.

—Capt. Harrison Berdan resigned the office of street commissioner at the last council meeting, and the resignation was very reluctantly accepted. This, as the Captain says, marks his retirement from public service. He has been sheriff, postmaster, chief of police and street commissioner, some of the offices he held twice, and always intended to do the right thing.

—They are shipping in here consignments of "Palmer" and "Waukesha" mineral water, which come in at the foot of Mason street there is a rowing well that furnishes water that has the official analysis shown to be equal to any mentioned above. "The prophet is not without honor save in his own country." Moral: Try Charlevoix mineral water, opposite Elston Hotel.

—About twenty ladies entertained Mrs. A. J. Parkhurst of Grand Rapids, one afternoon last week at the home of her niece, Mrs. W. A. Gray. After a fine pot luck supper was served on the lawn music was furnished in the parlor, and a good time was reported by all present. Mrs. Parkhurst has been a Charlevoix visitor for the past two week, and returned to day to her home in Grand Rapids.

—According to the report made to the Grand Haven for this customs district, there are 200 enrolled vessels in the district, and but twenty-seven of these are sailing vessels, showing that the "white wings" of the lakes are fast being displaced. The passing of the lake schooners is a matter of regret to many, as there was a romance and a charm about old carriers that the more modern boats do not possess.

—The fair of the Grand Traverse region, to be held at Traverse City this fall, will outstrip anything heretofore attempted in Northern Michigan. Particular attention will be paid to a display of the products of the soil on the region. There will be fine displays of the fruits, vegetables and grains that thrive in our soil. This is a fair in which all northern Michigan is interested, and it should be a huge success.

—The large crowds that are visiting the LaFa-lot theater this week are evidence that the program is up to the standard. The three Phelps' are holding over this week with new acts, and making very good. A. A. McDonald is winning fresh laurels nightly, with his quaint and droll comedy. The song and pictures are good. Special program Wednesday night. Taking into consideration that the program changes every night, the entertainment is far ahead of anything usually seen in a theater of this kind.

Charlevoix Boy Married.

From the Grand Rapids Herald.

The house of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Carrol was the scene of a pretty wedding Wednesday evening, at 8:30 o'clock, when their daughter Elizabeth was united in marriage to Mr. Samuel W. Rose. Rev. Higgins of the Presbyterian church performed the ceremony before a party of about seventy invited guests. The beautiful service of the Episcopalian church was used.

The house was beautifully decorated and the marriage vows were taken beneath a canopy of green ferns.

During the city friends present the parents of the groom, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Rose of Charlevoix gladdened the occasion by their presence. The bride was becomingly attired in a white silk gown and with bridal roses looked the very queen her life characteristics her to be. The groom wore conventional black.

After an evening most pleasantly passed and the serving of a most sumptious repast the groom took his prize to the home recently furnished throughout in the Kipp apartments Lake Ave., where they will be at home to friends after Sept. 1st.

The bride is a young lady of charming manners and one of the most popular in Grand Marais. The groom is an industrious, conscientious young man and a trusted employee of the Cook, Curtis & Millar lumber industry who has reason to point with pride to a past that is well finished. He enters upon a future which holds promise of much happiness and success. With the assistance of the young lady who has cast her lot with his the journey of life should be a path of roses.

The love and esteem in which this worthy couple are held was shown by the numerous and beautiful presents. The many friends of the bride and groom wish them a long pleasant and prosperous life.

Editor Baxter Seriously Injured.

J. W. Baxter, editor of the Boyne Citizen, was seriously injured in a railroad accident Monday morning, and is, at this writing, in a critical condition.

He was in a buggy with Dr. Shaver, of Boyne, on his way from Boyne Falls to Boyne City. As they approached a crossing they heard the train whistle for the crossing. Dr. Shaver, who was driving, thought he could make the crossing safely, and whipped up the horse. The horse passed the track but the engine struck the buggy, demolishing it, and throwing both occupants out.

Dr. Shaver, who was on the opposite side, was uninjured, but Mr. Baxter received injuries that may terminate fatally. His skull was fractured in two places and otherwise injured.

Mr. Baxter is a gentleman for whom the writer has a sincere respect, and we hope he may recover and continue to be an honor to Charlevoix county journalism.

Mr. Knowles Declines.

We have received a letter from Hon. L. E. Knowles, of Boyne City, in which he positively declines to be a candidate for State Senator.

Those who claim to be within the secret over-ride say Mr. Knowles pulls out to smooth the way for his partner, J. E. Converse, to the prosecutor's office. It is understood that Mr. Converse is an active candidate for that office against Mr. Clink.

It is also said that Prof. Nicholas, of East Jordan, is in training for the Probate Judge race with Mac Harris.

Covell a Big Man.

Traverse City Record.

Representative Colin C. Campbell, of Grand Rapids, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff in the case of Frank W. Johnson vs. the Desmond Chemical Company, just heard in circuit court before Judge Clarence N. Sessions, of Muskegon, is a candidate for speaker of the house of representatives, representing the Third representative district, and has no opposition.

"Tom, C. C. Covell is a big man," said Mr. Campbell yesterday afternoon in speaking of Mr. Covell's candidacy for the eleventh district congressional nomination "and he is a strong man. He will make himself felt if he goes to Washington."

A Most Precious Lot of Suckers and a Fine Fraud Specimen.

Charlevoix possesses the most unsuccessful-headed lot of suckers in the State of Michigan, and the editor of this paper is one of the suckers.

One day last week a well dressed stranger made his appearance in town, and at once began hunting up old G. A. R. veterans. To them he represented himself as a confederate scout. He related his war experiences with a freedom that fooled even Capt. Berdan and Major Green.

He was broke, and was trying to get to his wife at Cadillac. Would his chivalrous old foes help him out? They did, and a good sum was secured, in subscriptions of from 25 cents to $1.00. In several cases, after the money had been given him and the name signed, he erased the 25 cent items, and raised the figures to 50 cents, in order to catch more 50 cent suckers; and he got them. The amount secured was about fifteen dollars.

That night (Thursday) the old Confederate Scout was joyfully drunk, and the police gathered him in. When searched he had eleven cents on his person. That he is a stupendous fraud and dead beat is evident, as he endeavored to work the secret society racket, after the Confederate scout plan failed.

After remaining in jail from Thursday night until Monday, Justice Collins gave him a very brief time in which to shake the dust of Charlevoix from his feet, and he vamoosed.

He gave his name as Robert Campbell, and his home as Culpepper, Va. He is a bad man, and should be kept on the go.

What Billy Pearson Says.

Traverse City Eagle.

Mr. W. J. Pearson, prominent lumberman of Boyne Falls, spent last week in the southern portion of the district in the interests of George G. Covell for congress, and makes a fine report for the Traverse City man.

Mr. Pearson says that the high priced advertising matter inserted in some of the papers says that the Covell Congressional clubs are not enthusiastic in Grattot county and especially in Alma, is a wrong statement as he has been working with three club members for a week and their enthusiasm for Covell is bound. He says that there are 214 members in the Alma club and each member is a live one. The most conservative men in Grattot predict an even split of the votes, while other prominent business men say that Mr. Covell will carry the county. Among others who were on the job last week going over Grattot county in the interests of Mr. Covell were prominent attorneys who were willing to pay their way to Michigan, and it was no trouble to get them out to do work in other towns.

Mr. Pearson says he says that Mr. Covell will roll up a handsome vote for Mr. Covell and that a large majority is sure.

Excellent Health Advice.

Mrs. M. M. Davison, of No. 579 Gifford Ave., San Jose, says: "The worth of Electric Bitters as a general family remedy, for headache, biliousness and torpor of the liver and bowels is so pronounced that I am prompted to say a word in its favor, for the benefit of those seeking relief from such affections. There is more health for the digestive organs in a bottle of Electric Bitters than in any other remedy I know of." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c.

CHAPTER II.

A violin of searching fairly-loud; a tar round rise overlooking a vernal valley, a stately dwelling-house, extensive but by no means ancient and modern—this set in the midst of a garden full of sweetness, taste and grandeur.

On a lower level were so many as fifty neat new farmsteads, some of them in stages of construction, but none occupied—stands of deciduous bold fronds dots pattion of the singular landscape.

Anita, at the lowermost grade of the grassy slope thick, grim stacks arose from a wilderness of frame and stone factory buildings—but there were no brilliant, colored windows; all was cold, dark and lifeless. There, too, was silence, deep and mournful—a dead or sleeping city of industry.

There was light only at the palace on the hillside, and, in its spacious, green road, smooth as a race course and bordered with a nearly cut stretch of sward, a man plodded his way in the gossamer moonlight—Hibben Blake.

He was five years older than upon that memorable night when the war of his life-long had set in clouds of storm, disaster and sorrow. He was still as erect form was just straight as a sapling—that form, which always reminded of the faces one sees on coins and old Roman medals, preserved its original statuesque dignity and symmetry of outline, in spite of contact with the rise closer dream.

He had changed, as he had from his know, as though he were fevered and the fallow rose of a pitiful hectic, was pinched to sweep with a glance, fine arrow and keen and critical in his glance. The dress out a hand with an expression for economy—but one in taste clothing decidedly turned back to his seat. His hand rested in his hands, his frame shook with deep internal emotion.

Gideon rose on the steps.

He suddenly opened the outer screen door, slowly approached the table, and stuck into a chair opposite, as if drawn unbidden, unseen.

His eyes dwelt momentarily on the window space where that fairy vision of grace and loveliness had moved in and moved before.

His glance wandered past the wonderful draperies, across a rug worth its weight in gold and in the far away Persian looms and then up the decorated wall to a full length oil painting.

This seemed to speak—it was in color and expression the faithful counterpart of the beautiful girl who had just passed before it.

CHAPTER III.

A violin of searching fairly-loud; a rap hanging sullenness drove from his face some of its natural grim frankness.

In those sweet eyes was a latent sometthing that he remembered in the fair bright spirit some dozen to horrible death in the cold, cruel night of the great range. Can solitude Silver Company!

Then back sold the door, he turned from sentiment, sacrifice, to the stern, merciless tragic that had brought him hither.

He glanced toward the dimping man before him and saw his hand sent crashed his fist upon the green, glossy table.

Suddenly he—frowned by the room.

He stared in consternation, the surprise and then the cold, haughty bearing of the aristocrat disappeared from glowing

"Time is in asleep," said Gideon, rising quickly, taking his hat, stretching his cold shoulders, and turning to go.

"Wait!"

Mechanically and pure as golden beads dropped into a crystal dish, a sweet, pathetic tone pierced the brief chilling interventing.

"Wait, father," she said, simply.

And then she walked straight up to Gideon Hope.

Her penetrating, searching eyes rested full upon his cam, as unmovable, as clear, and yet so troubled.

"Sir," she said, in a voice that thrilled him, "I have heard your proposition. I will answer for myself, impulsive, rashly, has been done so. Father, I trust this will.

WILD DUCKS IN THE SOUTH.

It Is Called a Hunters' Heaven Along the Texas Gulf Coast.

The coast of Texas in the vicinity of Portland is the winter feeding ground for millions of ducks. The hunters go there by the score during the open season and bring their loot—ducks—to Portland, Gregory, Tarpon, Rockport and other places close to the shores of the bay, and to Corpus Christi City.

In previous years when there was no game law in Texas to protect the wild fowl, professional market hunters operated along the gulf coast and slaughtered the birds by the carload each season. The wanton destruction of wild game in Texas is now a thing of the past. Those who were engaged in the marketing of wild ducks made an effort to induce the last Legislature to have game fowl exempt from the provision of the law, but they were not successful.

The owners of ponies and lakes which afforded immensely fine feeding ground for the ducks made big fortunes out of the business and marketing the fowls before the game law was enacted. It is not an uncommon thing for a rancher to own an inland body of fresh water situated near the coast enjoyed an income of from $500 to $10,000 each year from the sale of wild ducks killed on his premises by professional hunters and sportsmen at his lake. The water is shallow and slid the grass abundant, so that the birds like it. The ducks are so shame and bashful in Mr. Self's opinion were shot out from the wedding. What was their mistake? They took the wedding cake. Ah, the cake! ostrich plume. In that scene of the pedument the wedding cake—constantly employed, also granted permission to supersaum to visit the lake, with the provision that they were to leave on the ground for market purposes all ducks, over a limited number, that they might kill. W. J. Bryan has been on two hunts at this lake. On each occasion he was the guest of the late Gov. Hogg. The sportsmen and professional hunters do their shooting from blinds. The lake is still a favorite resort for duck hunters, but the enormous annual revenue which it formerly brought to its owner is now cut off.

The new law provides that no hunter shall kill to exceed twenty-five ducks in any one day. Market hunting is absolutely prohibited. Before legal restrictions were placed upon this sport it was no uncommon thing to see piles of dead ducks laying upon the hunting grounds and around the lodging places of sportsmen. The fowls were slaughtered, it is said, for the mere desire to kill.

It is sold by sportsmen that one or two hours of good shooting a day ought to satisfy the most ardent hunter. It is a easy matter to kill the limit of twenty-five ducks in one day. When game is scrupulous one hunter usually goes after quail, or, if the conditions are favorable, he takes a look around for geese.

In the artesian well region between Portland and Brownsville the ducks were more abundant this season than ever before. This probably is due to the fact that the water from the wells has formed many small ponds and lakes upon the ranches and the feeding ground is fine for the fowls.

He Was Too Smart.

He was the only one at the table full of lovely girls, and, like all only men, he was spoiled. So when the belle of the ball came remarked that she was very fond of pepper and then sifted half the contents of the pepper box over her food he spread an old joke for her.

"It won't hurt you. This pepper is half peas."

"What is that you say?" asked the lady from the next table. "Speak a little louder, please."

He reiterated his remark.

"Why, that hurt you," retorted the lady hotly. "I do not use adulterated goods on my table."

"My dear madam," said the blond joker, "there are always a lot of pies in pepper."

"I were was an impressive pause. Then the lady said in a crushing voice:

"Oh, yes, I see so you always furnish part of the dessert."

"I don't understand."

"The chestnuts."—London Standard.

Long Sentences.

Ruskin, it is said, has written more sentences of inordinate length than any other classic writer of modern English prose. Frederic Harrison some years ago counted the words in a number of typical sentences, finding that in the earlier books it was no uncommon thing for Ruskin to run beyond the page before permitting himself and his readers the relief of a full stop. But in every case the sense is clear as day. Wordsworth's poem on the "Character of the Happy Warrior" is a notable example of unstained compactness. Apart from the opening and closing reliquiae the poem consists of two very long sentences, each containing twenty-four relatives and adjectival clauses. The longer of the two sentences contains fifty-seven decasyllabic lines. This is probably the longest sentence in English verse.—Argonaut.

E. W. Fitzpatrick, consulting engineer of the International Society for Building Commissioners, says the fire loss in the United States every year is $100,000,000 greater than the amount spent in new construction. In this estimate is included the money paid annually for insurance and the cost of fighting fire.

A better chore holding but one quart of cream is now made for domestic use.

SINS OF OMISSION.

By Rev. Adam Reeck.

Therefore do him that knoweth to do good and doeth it not, to him it is sin.—James 4:17.

In the presence of such a text all time separate themselves into two classes, like the sheep and the goats in the judgment, and also of omission take the left hand, the goats. Few people realize the gravity of these sins. "Sins," said the young man who came running to Christ, "all these commandments have I kept from my youth up: what lack I yet?" He never dreamed there were sins of omission.

It is not impossible to keep the ten commandments, at least in the letter. Thousands there are who do not worship false gods, who do not swear or break the Sabbath, who honor their parents and hold sacred the family relations, who would scorn to steal or lie, and if possessed of good health and money would be good Christian people. But how many there are who have fulfilled all righteousness?

When Jesus had a great truth to utter He made a parable and at the same time spoke it in the form of a question, so that the truth would keep the parable alive and the parable embody truth to keep just as alive. Matthew has lately and the body contains the soul. We have some of these parables from the one the game law was enacted. It is not an uncommon thing for a rancher to own an inland body of fresh water situated near the coast enjoyed an income of from $500 to $10,000 each year from the sale of wild ducks killed on his premises by professional hunters and sportsmen at his lake. dropped into a crystal dish, a sweet, pathetic tone pierced the brief chilling intervening.

"Wait, father," she said, simply.

And then she walked straight up to Gideon Hope.

Her penetrating, searching eyes rested full upon his cam, as unmovable, as clear, and yet so troubled.

"Sir," she said, in a voice that thrilled him, "I have heard your proposition. I will answer for myself, impulsive, rashly, has been done so. Father, I trust this will.

WILD DUCKS IN THE SOUTH.

The coast of Texas in the vicinity of Portland is the winter feeding ground for millions of ducks. The hunters go there by the score during the open season and bring their loot—ducks—to Portland, Gregory, Tarpon, Rockport and other places close to the shores of the bay, and to Corpus Christi City.

In previous years when there was no game law in Texas to protect the wild fowl, professional market hunters operated along the gulf coast and slaughtered the birds by the carload each season. The wanton destruction of wild game in Texas is now a thing of the past. Those who were engaged in the marketing of wild ducks made an effort to induce the last Legislature to have game fowl exempt from the provision of the law, but they were not successful.

The owners of ponies and lakes which afforded immensely fine feeding ground for the ducks made big fortunes out of the business and marketing the fowls before the game law was enacted. It is not an uncommon thing for a rancher to own an inland body of fresh water situated near the coast enjoyed an income of from $500 to $10,000 each year from the sale of wild ducks killed on his premises by professional hunters and sportsmen at his lake. The water is shallow and slid the grass abundant, so that the birds like it. The ducks are so shame and bashful in Mr. Self's opinion were shot out from the wedding. What was their mistake? They took the wedding cake. Ah, the cake! ostrich plume. In that scene of the pedument the wedding cake—constantly employed, also granted permission to supersaum to visit the lake, with the provision that they were to leave on the ground for market purposes all ducks, over a limited number, that they might kill. W. J. Bryan has been on two hunts at this lake. On each occasion he was the guest of the late Gov. Hogg. The sportsmen and professional hunters do their shooting from blinds. The lake is still a favorite resort for duck hunters, but the enormous annual revenue which it formerly brought to its owner is now cut off.

The new law provides that no hunter shall kill to exceed twenty-five ducks in any one day. Market hunting is absolutely prohibited. Before legal restrictions were placed upon this sport it was no uncommon thing to see piles of dead ducks laying upon the hunting grounds and around the lodging places of sportsmen. The fowls were slaughtered, it is sold, for the mere desire to kill.

It is sold by sportsmen that one or two hours of good shooting a day ought to satisfy the most ardent hunter. It is a easy matter to kill the limit of twenty-five ducks in one day. When game is scrupulous one hunter usually goes after quail, or, if the conditions are favorable, he takes a look around for geese.

In the artesian well region between Portland and Brownsville the ducks were more abundant this season than ever before. This probably is due to the fact that the water from the wells has formed many small ponds and lakes upon the ranches and the feeding ground is fine for the fowls.

He Was Too Smart.

He was the only man at the table full of lovely girls, and, like all only men, he was spoiled. So when the belle of the ball came remarked that she was very fond of pepper and then sifted half the contents of the pepper box over her food he spread an old joke for her.

"It won't hurt you. This pepper is half peas."

"What is that you say?" asked the lady from the next table. "Speak a little louder, please."

He reiterated his remark.

"Why, that hurt you," retorted the lady hotly. "I do not use adulterated goods on my table."

"My dear madam," said the blond joker, "there are always a lot of pies in pepper."

"I were was an impressive pause. Then the lady said in a crushing voice:

"Oh, yes, I see so you always furnish part of the dessert."

"I don't understand."

"The chestnuts."—London Standard.

Long Sentences.

Ruskin, it is sold, has written more sentences of inordinate length than any other classic writer of modern English prose. Frederic Harrison some years ago counted the words in a number of typical sentences, finding that in the earlier books it was no uncommon thing for Ruskin to run beyond the page before permitting himself and his readers the relief of a full stop. But in every case the sense is clear as day. Wordsworth's poem on the "Character of the Happy Warrior" is a notable example of unstained compactness. Apart from the opening and closing reliquiae the poem consists of two very long sentences, each containing twenty-four relatives and adjectival clauses. The longer of the two sentences contains fifty-seven decasyllabic lines. This is probably the longest sentence in English verse.—Argonaut.

E. W. Fitzpatrick, consulting engineer of the International Society for Building Commissioners, says the fire loss in the United States every year is $100,000,000 greater than the amount spent in new construction. In this estimate is included the money paid annually for insurance and the cost of fighting fire.

The Dutch Walks Delegate Federation is again in a ferment over the non-union operation, and the end-of-the-week labor union is now notice to strike unless the employer concedes the line and join the federation.

In an effort to reduce accidents at mines, for the year ending December 31 of the last session of Congress, places have increased from 2,000 to 3,000 in Pittsburg, Pa., the inspectors have to look at the state of these errors and not look at the almost-dangerous, and the state of the law in God the bigger the obstacles appear, the more they are overcome. Nothing is securely intended. But the God, who is the slavery of the Bible, and the hope of its brother, can do the same with the Goliath of intemperance.

The Sunday School Lesson

Subject for August 9, 1908.

"The guiding hand of God is most clearly seen in the life of David. Immediately after our last week's lesson, we read that the Spirit of the Lord departed from Saul and an evil spirit took possession of him. He became subject to deep fits of despondency which the evil spirit made worse. It was suggested that he have a musicians come and play to him, for which his troubled spirit might be soothed. Inquiry was made for such a person and David was suggested. And so David came to Saul's court and became acquainted with the man whom he was to depose, and who was to be his most bitter enemy. This is the connecting link between this and last week's lesson. Our lesson today is called David and Goliath. It may be termed the lesson that teaches what God can do with those who trust Him.

We have enemies as terrible as Goliath was to the Israelites. We have enemies as terrible as Goliath was to the Israelites, and we have enemies more so. Indwelling sin is a mighty enemy that never yields to God's law. It has ruined more people than any earthly capital, but, for all that, we can be victorious with the Pope, said most aptly, I'm sure not afraid of the Pope, said.

There are gigantic evils today that opposes the progress of the church and the truth, that are as formidable as Goliath was to the Israelites. Seen from the standpoint of the evil spirit, Saul was the Israelite. Seen from the standpoint of the Israelites, Goliath was the evil spirit. Saul was a type of the evil spirit, and Goliath was a type of the Israelites. Saul was a type of the evil spirit, and Goliath was a type of the Israelites. Saul was a type of the evil spirit, and Goliath was a type of the Israelites

CO-OPERATIVE STORES.

Once They Were Numerous, but Comparatively Few Now.

From the excellent report of the committee on co-operation of the New Hampshire state grange we take the following paragraph: The writer argues that the grange stores just filled their mission and then went out of business to a large extent. During the early days of the order its members gave special attention to the business side of the grange. "Co-operative action was undertaken in buying and selling, and a great many co-operative stores were opened. The fact that few of these stores were long lived has been urged as showing that such co-operation was not successful. It is true that some failed because of incompetent management, but generally speaking these stores, which marked a belief period of transition, proved a triumph for the principle they represented. Previous to the period of their establishment the farmers have been struggling for existence, while the mill decision—that is, the tradesmen in the towns—have been prospering amazingly. At the close of the period the farmers were growing wealthy in comparison, while the tradesmen were engaged in a fierce competitive battle for a livelihood. The day of large profits in the retail business had passed forever, and as the farmers could then afford to deal with the tradesmen again the co-operative stores disappeared, leaving their object fully accomplished."

TAXING AGRICULTURE.

National Master Bachelder Would Exempt Growing Crops.

From an address by National Master Bachelder before the national conference on taxation at Columbus, O., we make the following quotation:

"From whatever point of view the taxation of farm products is considered, the conclusion seems to me to be inevitable that such taxation has no governing features by which it can be justified, and I would most respectfully submit to this conference for its consideration the proposition that the public welfare would be advanced by adopting generally some of the exemptions of farm property now contained in the laws of the several states so that the following property should be exempted in all the states:

"First—All growing crops and all crops for a short period after harvesting.

"Second—All animals raised for food purposes under a certain age.

"Third—All farm work animals should be declared to be tools of industry and invoke within the exemptions now granted to tools, and the value of tool exemptions should be enlarged so as to include the value of such work animals.

"These exemptions, operating on all alike, would benefit all the consumers of the country as well as farmers, thus including the entire population."

Developing Leadership.

Miss Jennie Hool, secretary of Michigan state grange, very truly says that one of the great demonstrations of organization among farmer folk in the past forty years has been the discovery and turning to account of leaders among themselves. Precedent tendency, it is perhaps true, are born, not made. Just many who might be real leaders never develop the ability, and many others never are given the right limit. Their natural aggressiveness may cut or to waste on worthless ends. It is not tel out and schooled to logical accomplishments.

The grange steps in right here and offers the plan, the experience and the incentive to the proper development of leadership. More than this, it is the mission of the grange to do this. It is a feature of grange opportunity that presents itself as a privilege rather than as a duty. However, the perception of the privilege does not usually come in the primary grades of associated work. But when this opportunity is seized, human lives blossom and discover themselves in once realized it is found to have a rare quality of enjoyment and satisfaction.

Grange Day at Chautauqua.

This notable summer resort on Chautauqua lake sets apart one day for the meeting of Patrons from all western New York. The meeting will occur this year Aug. 22. And in addition to the regular programme of the Chautauqua institution there will be a special meeting for young men. This meeting will be addressed by professors from Cornell Agricultural college and representatives from the state grange on the general topic "What the Farm Offers to Young Men." The institution gives free admission on this day to young men from the various granges in Chautauqua county on the recommendation of their master. In the afternoon there will be a grange lecturers' conference. The programme by the institution for that day will be interesting and will include an address by Rev. Dr. MacArthur of New York city.

A new grange tent will be erected on the New York state fair grounds at Syracuse. The size will be 60 by 100 feet. State Master Gardner will be on hand all the week to welcome Patrons. There will be a literary programme in the Women's building on Grange day, which occurs on Sept. 16.

GARDNER FOR GOVERNOR.

Maine's Popular Past State Master a Gubernatorial Candidate.

Obadiah Gardner, past master of the Maine state grange, has been in the field since July 15 for gubernatorial honors.

Maine is the state where there is a Patron for every thirteen inhabitants and where "the growth of the grange is limited only by the number of residents in the state who are eligible to become members," where 200 of the 419 subordinate granges own their halls, where the grange has a total membership of 57,000 and where the grange has succeeded during the past few years in putting $28,000,000 of property on the tax duplicate which in I previously been exempting all or a part of its share of the tax burden. The wonderful part of the grange growth and increase in influence in Maine has taken place largely during the past decade under Mr. Gardner's leadership as master. When he became master in 1897 there were only 199 granges in the state with 20,000 members, as compared with 419 granges with 57,000 members when he retired last year. Mr. Gardner's home is at Rockland, Me., where his thoroughbred Jersey herd is engaged in supplying the local market and islands around about Rockland with a fine grade of milk. This herd has often been exhibited and his county carried off the first premium. He has an up to date dairy plant.

Brother Gardner is a Methodist man who went east instead of west. He was born at Port Huron, Mich., Sept. 25, 1852, and went to Maine in 1865. He joined the grange in 1873. In 1881 he became master of the Maine state grange executive committee, in which he continued until 1885, six years of this time its chairman. In 1890 he was elected master of the state grange. For six years he was a member of the Maine state board of agriculture, the last three of this time its president. From 1889 to 1903 he was lecturer of the national grange. Brother Gardner's superior executive ability is proved by his building up a fine private farming business and by the wonderful grange growth in Maine during the ten years of his leadership.

The following subjects for discussion will be found profitable for a newspaper evening in the grange:

"The influence of the newspaper. Is it increasing or decreasing?

Describe a model country weekly and tell how you would run it.

Question box. (a) How many daily papers are there in the United States? (b) How many papers in the United States? (c) Which is the fastest printing press? (d) What is a linotype machine? (e) Are the great dailies printed from type or plates? Describe the process. (f) What does the word "yellow" journalism mean? (g) How are newspaper pictures made?

Grange Day at Ohio State Fair.

Patrons of Ohio are especially looking forward to our annual gathering on the state fair grounds at Columbus, which occurs this year Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 2 and 3. Headquarters will be at grange hall, in the administration building where everything possible will be made for the comfort of visiting Patrons. Let all who have ever been within our gates, but who may have lost active connection with the Order, come and renew their allegiance and learn what great strides are being made by the grange along social, educational and economic lines. Prominent Patrons will be present, and interesting exercises will be arranged. The Ohio state board of agriculture has in the past proved a gracious host and will spare no pains this year to make our reunion a red letter day in our memories. Come and bring your friends. Leave your pocketbooks and wraps at headquarters, see the great exposition and renew and extend your acquaintances.—A. Derbick, Master Ohio State Grange.

Three Months' Progress.

From April 1 to June 30 granges were organized as follows: California, 2; Colorado, 4; Idaho, 11; Indiana, 2; Iowa, 1; Kansas, 2; Maine, 55; Maryland, 4; Massachusetts, 2; Michigan, 1; New Hampshire, 1; New York, 7; Oregon, 6; Ohio, 8; Pennsylvania, 10; South Dakota, 2; Vermont, 1; Washington, 18; total, 88. Granges were reorganized: California, 1; Massachusetts, 2; Michigan, 1; Pennsylvania, 3; Washington, 7; total, 8.

An Entertaining Grange.

Chautauqua county grange once held a field meeting on the shores of Lake Erie. It was so well planned with the location that some of the members of the grange boarded the lunch and a piece of adjacent woods to be used as a permanent amusement resort.

Work for European Tailors.

It seems not very improbable that the dress adopted by educated India, which is more or less at the western type, will also be adopted by the people at large in the future. The foolishness of the orientals for gay colors may give rise to gorgeous neckties and goldlace collars.—Auburn Bindstan Review.

WHAT POMONAS ARE DOING.

Hints and Suggestions From New York's Live County Granges.

Jefferson Pomona is discussing the advisability of discontinuing the Patrons' assembly, a subscription concected with the Pomona. In an address before the Jefferson Pomona Cobb spoke very highly of the work of the legislative committee at Albany and said that "from the body of men more reasonable and intelligent representatives cannot be received." Lieutenant Governor Chamber was also present and delivered an address. At the Genesee Pomona it was announced that eight granges will exhibit at the county fair, and probably the Juvenile grange will also send an exhibit. At the Dutchess Pomona it was decided to hold the Pomeroy grange and convene about 225 at the Pomona. Master Cummings spoke of the question of representation at the state grange now discussed, and a plan was suggested whereby each subordinate grange credit each year for the ensuing year, commencing in 1909, for when each credit shall equal 100, it will be entitled to one delegate, and for every 50 credits thereafter it will be entitled to name a delegate from its own membership. That is a grange with 1 membership of 100 would get a delegate of its own every four years, with 200 every seven every second year and would have a surplus of 50 to carry forward to the next year. Clinton Pomona offers cash prizes to subordinate granges which have the largest number in a third and fourth degrees in best form at a future meeting. Master Cummings also commended for his position on rural mail carriers. Genesee Pomona discussed a plan for making the reports from subordinate granges more pertinent and full by a system of blanks to be filled out by each grange secretary. Ontario Pomona conferred the fifth degree on 37 forty-four candidates, and the third degree was accomplished on a large class. A Cornell professor delivered the afternoon address. Master Ponema has taken steps for its incorporation. Lewis Pomona is arranging prize spelling contests. The prize winners in the subordinate granges are to compete on the Superior Pomona. This Pomona also voted a fifty dollar grange scholarship to the Home Agricultural college at Cornell. Washington Pomona conferred the fifth degree on 40 candidates. The afternoon entertainment was discussed. Friendship, a class of twenty-one received the fifth degree at Rose Pomona. The Oswego Pomona is in a difficulty in securing a place to hold meetings on account of the large attendance expected of course. This is a very concerning sign. At the St. Lawrence Pomona the Rochester fire tire of the last meeting was a dull to attract ladies. At the Saratoga Pomona meeting a member read a paper on "Why I became an American citizen." He told sixteen years before he left the British army and his first meeting with an American, the exchange of stories about their home life and the desire to visit the country which grew out of this chance meeting.

LUCKY BEAN SAVED SAILOR

Providence Placed Talisman in His Hand When He Was Thrown Unconscious Among Cannibals.

Of all the many mysterious products of the ocean, none can compare with the sea-bean. Scientists are divided as to its origin, as no one has ever seen the shrub or vine on which it grows, and it is never found save when the beaten of the deep has been cast by a heavy sea when the sea-beans, cast forth from some mysterious depth, are found scattered among the wrack of the derelicts of the tide. There are numerous varieties, large and small, and some are very rare, especially the large liver bean, and the banded beans. The savage tribes which inhabit the South Seas regard them as almost sacred, and look upon the lucky possessor of one of the rare varieties as particularly favored by the gods. Dusky belles, having in their possession these rare products of the deep, will fight for their treasure against all comers, as they believe that the sea-bean gives them unusual power, especially in love, and that any man on whom their affections are set, must yield to their charms if they but touch him with the lucky beans. One touch of the bean binds their lover to them forever.

Mr. Lock, manager of the Stanislaus county exhibit cars from California, is the fortunate possessor of a rare specimen which has a thrilling history which would seem to prove the superstition of the savages of the South Sea Island. It was given to him by a sailor friend, who was wrecked in a mighty storm which swept the tropical seas. The sailor, unconscious and nearly dead, was washed ashore on an island, and when he recovered his senses he found himself surrounded by a crowd of savage men and women. They were cannibals, and his fate would undoubtedly have been a horrible one, but suddenly a native now grasped in the sailor's hand, one of the rarest of the sea beans. Where it came from and how it happened that he held it when he was cast upon the beach he never knew, but the superstitious natives looked upon him as one especially protected by the gods, and the bean proved to him a lucky one indeed for it undoubtedly saved him from a terrible fate. Some years ago Mr. Lock befriended this old sailor in San Francisco, and as a reward this lucky bean was presented to him, and he values it highly. "I am not superstitious," said Mr. Lock to a reporter for this paper, which he has had made into a watch charm, "but I have not had any way my luck since I was presented with the lucky bean by old sailor friend Seth."

THREE FIRES SWEEP OABY.

Mystery Surrounding Origin of Flames Which Cause $94,300 Loss.

Three fires, all of unknown origin, swept Gary, Ind., Sunday, and destroyed property valued at almost $95,000. The fires were in the heart of the business district. Police believe that the conflagrations were the work of an incendiary. Each one started under suspicious circumstances. No one saw the blaze until they were well under way, and the attempts by the police and the insurance adjusters to settle the blame for them have proved unsuccessful. No suspicion to persons were reported, but in the burning of the Gardner Hotel several guests had narrow escapes. The fire escapes were packed with people, who rushed away from the burning future. Others escaped by jumping from windows. Once it was feared that the Gary fire department could not control the flames, and that the entire city would be swept away. Calls for help were sent to other cities. In each case, before the fire department from other towns arrived, the fires were under control. The losses were: Landowski, Walter, building, $7,000; Stanko, Wasser, barber shop, $800; Hatch, Mike, saloon, $1,000; Leary & Larkin, lunch-room shop, $800; Leary & Larkin, lunch-room shop, $800; Leary & Mehr, saloon, $2,000; Sparks, Sam, shoe repairer, $1,000; Hypothecaria & Co., fishery and grocery, $2,000; Hatch, M. H., bakery property, $2,000; Gardner, proprietor, $22,000; Gardner, Hotel, $4,000. TAFT AT CINCINNATI VOICES HIS POLICIES

OHIO CITY OBSERVES GALA DAY.

In Speech of Acceptance Obleson Declares He Would Continue Roosevelt Policies if Elected.

Cincinnati on Tuesday threw itself heartiness into one week of helping Senator William Warner notify William Howard Taft that the Republican party had nominated him for the presidency of the United States. And, standing on a flag-draped platform in front of the old colonial portico of his brother's home, William H. Taft accepted the nomination. The quaint old residence of Charles P. Taft—once in the outlying residence section of the city, but now almost swallowed up by the big business buildings that have surrounded it—was the center of a demonstration unequaled in Cincinnati's history.

The nominee delivered a speech of acceptance in which he stated the Roosevelt edicts to his manhood and said that they were the main strength of the Republican party in the eyes of the people. He praised the standards set by President Roosevelt and followed this praise with an outline of what he thought a "Taft" administration should be.

"The chief function of the next administration, in my judgment," said Mr. Taft near the opening of his speech, "is distinct from and a progressive development of that which has been performed by President Roosevelt. The chief function of the next administration is to complete and perfect the machinery by which these new standards may be maintained and by which the law-breakers may be promptly apprehended and punished, but which shall operate with sufficient accuracy and dispatch to interfere with legitimate business as little as possible."

Points from Taft's Speech.

"The man who hesitates at the expression of the popular conscience was Thomas Jefferson. He laid down the doctrine that rich violators of the law should be as amenable to execution and punishment as the offender without wealth and influence.

"In this work Mr. Roosevelt has had the sympathy and support of the Republican party, and its chief hope of success must rest in the continuance of the support by the sincerity of the party's declaration in its platform that it intends to carry on the work.

"It is necessary to define some means of classifying and treating the combination of such corporations as have the power and reputation to affect interests of interstate trade and monopolies."

The platform adopted by the convention in Chicago contains such other planks as the assembling of the parts of a machine which has been in the past, parts which were made by hand. The government should not interfere with the one any more than the other.

"Unlawful trusts should be restrained and punished with the utmost promptness and the persons engaged in them should be punished with all the severity of criminal prosecution."

The Democratic proposal to separate the business of corporations in such a way as to fix the price of commodities and compel their sale at such price is an absurd and unhistorical plank as was ever inserted in a Democratic political platform."

Our position is clear and unequivocal. We are unwilling to recognize even an appearance of subjection to labor in laying injunctions, nor is the spirit of Lincoln's address to Congress in 1861 in favor of such a proposition."

Girls Healthier Than Boys.

From the examination of children under the new child labor law in the District of Columbia since June 30, out of 4,000 children so tested as to their physical condition, at the age of 16 or less, it is seen that 54 boys were rejected and only 3 girls. At the same time a census bureau bulletin shows that women live much longer and are healthier lives. But whereas the labor of women approximates that of men, as in Italy and Ireland, the death rate of women is much higher than that for both men and women in less per thousand than in 1850.

For the first time in two years the Baltimore canneries have started up, and they are buying the peaches from the orchards of Delaware and Maryland in competition with canneries. CITIES BURN; 200 DIE; BIG AREA FIRE-SWEPT.

Forest Land in Kootenay Valley is Devastated by Sea of Flame.

THOUSANDS ARE HOMELESS.

Many Towns Are in Path of the Destroyer and Sentenntie Fies in Panic.

At least 200 lives are known to have been lost as the result of both fires, which have swept over an area of one hundred square miles in the east Kootenay country, Manitoba. Whole cities and towns have been laid low and the loss in property is estimated at many millions of dollars, and this may be swelled enormously.

Among the towns destroyed or in the path of the flames are the following:

	Population.		Population.
Fernie	5,000	Sparwood	200
Coal Creek	400	Olson	100
Michel	1,500	McGillivray	100
Natal	1,000	Hosmer	100
Morrissy	200	Cokato	100
Elko	300	Wycliffe	100

The City of Fernie, B. C., a place of 5,000 population, is reported to be wiped out. Michel, fourteen miles distant, is also devastated, and the fate of Hosmer, Morrissy, Natal, Sparwood, Hosmer towns, was in doubt, they being cut off from all communication. Over 200 lives are known to have been lost, seventy-four of them were in Fernie. Six people died in the flames, the rest met death in No. 4 logging camp of the big Canadian Lumber Company. It was surrounded by fire and not a single person escaped. A territory of 100 square miles is reported to be swept by scores of flames. Through it were scattered hundreds of homesteads and great sections of the forest, so that the actual loss of life will not be known for days. The properties of the Canadian Pacific and Great Northern railways are destroyed, the bridges and rolling stock burned out. The inhabitants of the towns fled to open districts in the vicinity in the hope of safety. The railway vessels are placed all available trains at their disposal. The conflagration is the greatest which has ever visited Canada.

For the last month forest fires have been raging in the mountains of the Elk River valley country, but they have not been considered seriously. Saturday morning a heavy wind sprang up from the west, and early in the afternoon the flames appeared over the crest of the mountains in the form of a wall. They ran down the mountain side and before a fire guard could be organized had reached the town. When an hour the town was deserted, and the inhabitants fled, leaving their homes and leaving their all behind them.

All night long the fleeing refugees, men, women and children, continued the destination being a small prairie in the valley three miles southeast of the town. Sixty people were reported in this place. Sunday morning the fire had reached the outskirts. Fernie, with a population of 5,000, is reported to be wiped out.

TAFT FOR ROOSEVELT'S POLICIES; PLEDGES CONTINUANCE OF REFORMS

William H. Taft, standing on the portico of his brother's home in Cincinnati, the city of his nativity, formally accepted the Republican nomination for the Presidency. He pledged allegiance to the policies of President Roosevelt and asserted that the chief function of the next Republican administration would be to develop the Roosevelt policies and clinch what had been begun by the present chief executive of the nation.

In doing this, however, Mr. Taft pointed out that there are some new and difficult work to do, principally by "devise ways and means by which the high level of business prosperity and obedience to law which the President Roosevelt has established may be maintained without undue interference with legitimate business." In part Mr. Taft said:

Points of Warner and Gentlemen of the Committee:

I am deeply sensible of the honor which the Republican national convention has conferred upon me in the nomination for the presidency, and I accept the nomination and the responsibility of the duties of the office with a full appreciation of the responsibility it imposes.

Gentlemen, the strength of the Republican cause rests in the confidence which is in the fact that we represent the policies of a vigorous and important but not unnecessarily controlling factor.

Another suggestion in respect to substantive and ancillary machinery necessary to carry our Republican policies is that of the incorporation under national laws or the licensing by national license of corporations engaged in commerce and of an interstate trade.

The belief is that nearly all corporations doing a commercial business are engaged in interstate commerce, and if these all were required to take out a federal license or a federal charter, the courts would have jurisdiction of the cases, and would become more disposed to the enforcement of the law.

Discussion Deprecated.

Mr. Roosevelt recommended an amendment to the antitrust law, known as the Hepburn bill, which provided for publicity of the business of the corporations mentioned, and departures from it would be a mistake. Discussion of the Hepburn bill, which provided for publicity of the business of the corporations mentioned, and departures from it would be a mistake. Discussion of the Hepburn bill, which provided for publicity of the business of the corporations mentioned, and departures from it would be a mistake.

Notice for Deportation.

The unlawful injury done in industrial disputes, such as I have described, and the inadequate remedies which are sufficient to make it worthwhile to defend a suit, or to submit to an injunction, or to pay that three, may not be discussed. I do not mean to say that there may not be cases in which the injunction is a proper remedy under sight properly be based without undue interference with the business.

A statute may be framed which shall define with considerable particularity, and yet sufficiently for practical purposes, the cases in which restraining orders may be issued without notice, and it may be possible that when they are issued they may be made to last for a much shorter period, during which time notice shall be received and the defendant shall be received and a postponement of the hearing.

The adequacy of our present currency system, due to changed conditions of business, has been very generally recognized. The Republican platform well states that we must have a more elastic and adaptable system to meet the requirements of our business and industrial enterprises and business men generally, which must be provided for by a system recognizing the fluctuations in interest rates, and the demand for money in good old gold, and which shall prevent rather than aid financial stringency in the money market.

Favors Postal Savings Banks.

In addition to this the Republican platform recommends the adoption of a postal savings bank system under which, if of course, the government would become responsible to depositors for the payment of the money deposited.

The Democratic platform recommends a non-partisan board of control over a bank as may come by, in the nature of inferred information, to be a guaranty fund to pay the depositors of any bank which fails. The proposition is to tax the honest prudent bankers to make up for dishonest, reckless bankers. Nobody can foresee the burden which would be imposed upon the conservative bankers of the country by the obligation to make good the losses incurred by the reckless, speculative and dishonest men who would be enabled to secure deposits under the system in the face of the proposed insurance. In the present time, the banks have no more all safeguards against recklessness and lapsing and the chief and in the end probably the only benefit would accrue to the irresponsible.

The Republican party has pursued consistently the policy of vigilantly adopted with respect to the dependencies which come to us as the result of the Spanish war. The material prosperity of Porto Rico, Cuba and the Philippines is the chief of the chief inhabitants toward better conditions by a large portion of the people of those islands should make every American proud that the flag of our country has so far proved a blessing to the people.

Our position is clear and unequivocal. We are anxious to prevent even an appearance of subjection to labor in issuing injunctions, but in the spirit of Lincoln's address to Congress in 1861 we are in favor of our fellow citizens, but in the interest of justice we all.

* * *

The Democratic proposal to supervise the business of corporations is such a way as to fix the price of commodities and compel their sale at such a price is as absurd and socialistic a plank as was ever inserted in a Democratic political platform.

* * *

The Democratic platform promises to take off the tariff on all articles coming from the Philippines, and to extend to the so-called "trusts," and to put them on the free list. This is a matter for our own good, the trusts, but all that's another story.

Never in the history of the country has there been such an insidious attack upon the judicial system as the proposal to impeach by jury trial certain judicial orders of the court made after full hearing and the enforcement of such order.

The combination of large capital in plants to manufacture goods with the greater economy is just as commendable as the combining of the parts of a machine to the manufacture of what formerly was made by hand. The government should not interfere with the one any more than the other.

Strange Story of Eric Paul.

"General, did Eric Paul find you? He was looking for you this forenoon."

The questioner and questioned sat in front of a large wall tent. Captain Higbee of the Twenty-Thousandth had put up on the broad town in front of his St. Paul home for the comfort and convenience of his regimental commandos as were in attendance upon the national encampment a few years ago. The general had been colonel of the Twenty-first and the other was a captain.

"Yes, we met," said General Bryant, "and he told me how he had gotten along since I gave him a scolding when after we had parted "good morning." Did you remember your Eric's sad experience during the war?"

"Name any of my old boys whose war experience is not familiar to me," said the old general, and he sat down on his knee one than a regimental commander has in the men he has for years commanded, and, in fact, in memory and in battle, but it is not very often he does so.

Then the grizzled general with a heart as tender as a mother's, and whose love and regard for his boys who followed him for four years has a little cavalry fight between Charleston, now in West Virginia, and Berryville, and for some days while there were a series of skirmishes taking place nearly every day. The wounds of soldier boy ever passed through after having been a prisoner for nearly a year, part of the time at Andersonville and a part at Salisbury, during which time he made three unsuccessful attempts to escape, he needed no other reminder than the sight of sickness and suffering, and the sight of the wounded that was soon wrought in their homes, and although the number of the men who had fallen and when the wounded that was used to their friends, and slow to it that the dead received Christian burial.

"I remember there was a young boy stood, and, as it proved, mortally wounded in a fight in front of the house of a lady who lived in Berryville. The ladies were on the porch at the time. They were, as I remember, beside the young Confederate soldier to the porch, and they had brought him in, but his mame and dead on the porch with his head in the lap of one of the good ladies. There had him buried in the little graveyard at Charlestown in the family lot of one of the women.

"It was twenty-five years after this that my lady to whose lot the lad was buried was visiting in Abingdon, in the southwestern part of the State. She had come to the house of a friend who was very seriously injured. She was taken into the house of an old lady who resided in Abingdon and carefully cared. The Good Samaritan, in whose house she was ill for quite a long while, was a good deal of her time attending to her, and they became great friends.

"One day the Abingdon lady related to the young lady the story of the lad that she had a son who was killed in a fight somewhere in Virginia, and that she had lost her grave and that she had never heard anything of his body nor of the details concerning his death.

"This freshened the mind of the old woman, who went home as fast as her feet could go, and, as she recovered from her fatigue and presented the address that was sent in by her mother, wrote back to her good friend at Abingdon, and found that the lady who had taken her into her home in her hay was the son of the good woman who had been caring for her when she was sick at Abingdon. The mother, fully satisfied that the Abingdon lady was her son, and, in a transport, got his dead body that had been buried for many years and took it back to her home, where the remains were delivered to the family lot at Abingdon.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR.

Gov. Warner's Alleged Divine Mission.

Governor Warner states he has but one purpose in seeking a third term and that is to secure the enactment of the following legislation:

1. An anti-lobby law.
2. An improved primary law.
3. A law for the ad valorem taxation of telegraph and telephone property.
4. A law to control corporate capitalization.

He has already had two terms. Read his record on these matters to date.

THE ANTI-LOBBY LAW.

No official mention of the matter during Gov. Warner's first term.

Referred to in the Governor's message to the legislature of 1907—a bill was introduced but there is no official record that the Governor took any action to have it passed.

The bill was again introduced at the special session of 1907 but was killed in the House, which throughout the session was controlled by the Governor's wishes in matters of legislation.

THE PRIMARY LAW.

The present law was passed by the legislature of 1905.

The provision requiring 40 per cent. to nominate governor and lieutenant governor (which Warner is now so anxious to remove) was inserted with his approval and consent.

Gov. Warner did not declare for a state-wide primary law until after Dr. Bradley had announced it as a part of his (Bradley's) platform.

TELEGRAPH AND TELEPHONE BILL.

Introduced at the session of 1905 but killed by friends of the companies.

Gov. Warner was silent upon the matter throughout his entire first term.

Introduced at the regular session of 1907 but killed in the House committee on general taxation, a majority of whose members were friends of the governor's. Just before the close of this session Governor Warner appointed ex-Senator Doherty (the leading lobbyist opposing the bill) a member of the State Board of Agriculture.

Introduced in special session of 1907 by Senator Kinnane, an opponent of the Governor. It passed the senate but was killed in the House committee on general taxation, a majority of whom, as already stated, were the Governor's friends.

Ex-Senator Doherty, the Governor's appointee, was again the chief opponent of the bill.

CONTROL OF CORPORATE CAPITALIZATION.

There is no record that the governor did anything to secure action beyond mentioning it in his message.

At the special session of 1907 the bill passed the House and was killed in the senate railroad committee. Three members of this committee were the Governor's friends. The chairman of the committee was the Governor's personal representative in the senate from his own county.

Whom does this record make safe? Warner's friends or both the governor and his friends?

Must Back up H's Statement.

A friend Special says:

In reply to an attack upon Mr. Covell while in the state legislature being made by the Dodds supporters Mr. Covell has openly challenged Mr. Dodds, his opponent, to a public debate upon his record in the legislature. Mr. Covell made a forcible defense of his position while in the house of representatives and senate which satisfied those present who composed the audience that the statements by the opponent were made for the purpose of prejudicing the people of the district against Mr. Covell. Mr. Covell asked the opponent to deny some of the statements made in such a manner as to controvert any effort they may have had.

It is now up to Mr. Dodds to prove the statements being made by entering into a public debate with Mr. Covell or else admit he carelessly made here Saturday night.

What Mayor King Says of Covell.

"I saw an item in the Herald a few days ago that said the Covell club at Alma night do Mr. Covell more harm than good," said Mayor Francis King of that city.

"For the life of me I can't figure out how that will come out. The club started with 200 members and it has over 250 now and it seems to me that they will do Covell some good.

"John W. Holmes, who was a member of the constitutional convention, has been going around the country a little to see how Mr. Covell stands and he tells me that Covell's chances of carrying Gratiot county are very good indeed. If he does he will be elected hands down, and I expect to see him win nicely."

Discovered a Wreck.

The United States Lake Survey steamer Search, which is engaged in sweeping the south end of Lake Michigan, reports the discovery of a wreck lying in six feet of water, 6¼ miles N. 70 degrees 30 minutes east (azimuth 70 degrees 30 minutes) from South Chicago breakwater lighthouse, and eight miles N. 21 degrees 45 minutes E. (azimuth 21 degrees 45 minutes) from the furnace stack of the Inland Steel company at Indiana Harbor.

At present high stage of Lake Michigan, there is not over 22 feet of water over the wreck, and at standard low water about 19½ feet. As this wreck is eight miles out in the lake, and directly on the track of the heavy traffic for Chicago, Indiana Harbor, and Gary, it is a dangerous menace.

The wreck is believed locally to be the hull of the five-masted schooner David Dows.

LONG WARS DUE TO WHISKERS.

Trivial Incident Led to Three Hundred Years of Fighting.

For ages beards were the delight of ancient beauties. The sight of a shaved face was considered indicative of age and servitude. To obey the injunctions of his bishops, Louis VII of France allowed his hair to grow long and shaved off his luxuriant whiskers. Eleanor of Aquitaine, his consort, found him with the unemployed appearance very ridiculous and very contemptible. She revenged herself by becoming something more than a concubine. The king obtained a divorce. She then married the count of Anjou, who shortly afterward ascended the French throne, and gave him as her marriage dower the rich provinces of Poitou and Guienne, and this was the origin of those wars which for 300 years devastated France and which cost the French nation 3,000,000 men. All of which probably had never taken place if Louis VII had not been so rash as to shave off his whiskers, by which he made himself so disgusting to the fair Eleanor.

—The naval reserve fleet, embracing the Wolverine, Hawk, Dorothea, Porto, Gopher, Don Juan de Austria, and Yantic, passed this port close in at six p. m. Friday, bound for Harbor Springs. They were in single column formation and made a most interesting picture.

—There is much misunderstanding as to enrollment. Many voters have the idea that if they are registered it is all that is necessary, but such is not the fact. All who did not enroll two years ago must do so Aug. 29 or they cannot vote at the primary Sept. 1st. It is stated there are scores of voters in the state who are not enrolled.

—The gasoline yacht Dolma, owned by A. W. Hoppe, of Grand Rapids, a wealthy furniture manufacturer, has been in port several days. Mr. and Mrs. Hoppe had five guests aboard. The Dolma is the most completely equipped gasoline yacht ever entering this port, and cost $25,000. She left for West Shore ports Monday afternoon.

—Elk Rapids Progress: Frank P. Brown, travelling salesman for the Elk Cement & Lime Company, whom we stated last week had left Elk Rapids after a month's outing here, has been recalled to the works, and with his wife and sister-in-law, Miss Dekter of Milwaukee, reached here Tuesday evening. They will remain for at least a month.

—Joe and Nick Shores, the famous Bohemian guides and prevaricators, were out on the Jordan river last week with Fred J. Meech and his guest, Mr. Conrad. Joe says they failed to see a rainbow trout in 7 inches long. We have called on Mr. Meech for a verification of this story, but, as a matter of fact, Fred is very little improvement over Nick and Joe when it comes to a show-down.

—Mrs. H. L. Iddings and daughter Horatia left Monday for Calumet to visit relatives.

—Apples are beginning to come in, and Bert Wilber is the first to open the market. Although this is an "off year" on apples, the "Dutchess of Oldenberg" orchards will turn in quite a crop. September is the month for picking the "Dutchess," but they are already coming in.

—Capt. Morton, superintendent of Life Saving Service, was here over Sunday. Monday morning he inspected Capt. Kent's station and then went to Beaver Island. Lieut. Habinger, U. S. Revenue Cutter service, inspector for this district, recently passed his examination for promotion to the grade of Captain, and will leave this district Jan. 1st to take command of a ship.

—The Fisk Jubilee Singers, one of the greatest organizations of its kind in the world, and possibly the greatest, will appear at the Charlevoix Theater, Monday evening, August 24th. Without question this will be the choicest musical event of the season. The Fisk Jubilee Singers have a world-wide reputation. We are very rarely favored with an entertainment of such high grade, and we sincerely hope the theater will be filled.

—The trout season closed Saturday. The next line of sport which is open to lovers of wood and stream is for duck, which begins September 1st and lasts to January 1, 1909. The law in this location forbids the killing of more than 25 in one day and the hunter must not use a gun larger than 10 caliber. The quail, partridge and squirrel season will open October 15 and continue till November 30. Then comes the deer season, which opens November 10 and lasts a month.

—The Baptist Assembly, which was lost on the shore of Lake Mitchell near Cadillac last week came to a close Sunday evening; the meetings were addressed by prominent conference workers from Chicago, Milwaukee, Bloomfield, N. J., Muskegon and elsewhere, and those who attended were greatly benefited. At a meeting of the directors the value of the property was advanced 50 per cent. and the prospects for next season are good, for a larger crowd and a stronger program.

—The Fisk Quartet, of Nashville, Tenn., will give one of their delightful entertainments at the Charlevoix Theater, Monday evening, Aug. 24th. The readings are taken from Paul Laurence Dunbar, and Mr. Myers has the reputation of being the best of all Mr. Dunbar's interpreters. Tickets to any part of the house including reserve seats may be secured at the Try Drug Store for 50 cents. Reserve seats go on sale Friday morning at nine o'clock. Entertainment will commence at eight o'clock.

FATAL EXPLOSION.

Boiler of Steamer Lelanau Blow Up on Lelanau Lake—Two Killed. Several Injured.

The small steamer Lelanau running between Leland and Fauch, on Lake Lelanau, blew up her boiler Monday morning.

Mrs. Isabella LaBlume, of Traverse City, was instantly killed and John Harting, who was wheeling the boat, was fatally injured. Those injured were Russell Mills, of Ann Arbor; A. B. Cook, Mrs. R. S. Hastings, of Traverse City; Richard Steffens and Miles Atwood, of Leland.

John Harting is well known in Charlevoix, having once run a fish tug here. He was a brother of William Harting, of Charlevoix.

The Lechanau is 51 feet long with a beam of 12 feet. She was built by Mosier brothers, at Provemont about eight years ago and has been on the Fouch-Leland run ever since. The engine was a single cylinder, high pressure vertical machine, but it sent the boat along about 12 miles an hour.

"There is just about one chance in a hundred that Capt. John Harting, who was so terribly scalded in the disaster on Carp Lake this morning, will survive. His back, sides, legs and the left side of his face are scalded to a turn, and his sufferings were terrible in making the trip to the city this morning. He walked from the train to the sanitarium, as his car was stopped just in front of the hospital. He walked because it was easier than being carried the distance owing to his burns.

Death of Mrs. Sim Baker.

Mrs. Baker, wife of Sim Baker and mother of John Baker, of this city, and Mrs. Jos. Clark Jr., of Norwood, died in Traverse City last Thursday evening.

Mrs. Baker was 80 years of age, and was a pioneer, having located on a Norwood farm in 1878. She has been in poor health for several years. She was a lady of rare domestic qualities, and marked devotion to her family.

The funeral occurred from the Congregational church on Saturday afternoon. Rev. Dr. Putnam officiating. Interment at Brookfield.

—Foreman Frank Bevelheimer and cashier L. A. Meiers, of the Central Illuminating Co., with a force of 12 men and an outfit, are here, and began the work of repairing the pavement Monday morning. Mr. Bevelheimer was the foreman in charge when the pavement was laid, and the two cofferal surface-men are also the same. All low spots will be removed up to proper grade, and all imperfections corrected. It will take about two weeks to do the work.

—In another item in this issue we mention the fact that the Central Illuminating Pavement Co. is here with a force repairing the pavement. As a matter of fact the pavement is being re-surfaced, at an expense to the company of not less than $1,000. The Pavement Co. guaranteed the pavement for ten years, but in doing this work beyond the limit of contract obligation. It speaks volumes for the Central Co. to not make use of the best pavement in the world, but if does the work with due regard to its high reputation. "Jack" Cramond, general manager of the company, arrived here last night. Mr. Cramond was in charge of the work when the pavement was laid, and has many friends here.

—It will interest the many friends of Gen. Harris A. Wheeler, of Chicago, formerly a prominent member of the Chicago Club, of this city, to learn that he has been appointed Grand Recorder of the Grand Commandery of Knights Templar, of Illinois, succeeded to late Sir Knight Gen. W. Barnard, one of the most distinguished Masons of the United States. Sir Knight Wheeler is a past commander of the famous Apollo Commandery of Chicago, and is one of the most chivalrous Knights and accomplished gentlemen in the broad realm of human endeavor. Gen. Wheeler was formerly commander of the first brigade Illinois National Guard, and has conducted most distinguished service.

For Sore Feet.

"I have found Bucklen's Arnica Salve to be the proper thing to use for sore feet, as well as for healing burns, sores, cuts, and all manner of abrasions," writes Mr. W. Stone, of East Poland, Maine. It is the proper thing to use for piles. Try it! Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 25c.

COUNTY FAIR.

The Charlevoix County Agricultural Society Will Surpass Previous Efforts.

Just a little over a month away is the annual banner event for this county and district—the Charlevoix County Fair—which meets at East Jordan, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Sept. 22, 23, 24.

Elaborate preparations are being made and the event promises to be the best ever held—and this is the twenty-fourth fair.

Secretary R. A. Brintnall is busy this week putting out the premium lists and getting them into the hands of those that are interested. If you want one, either see him personally or drop him a line.

Among the important changes in the list is that in Division B—Cattle, a proviso being made that all entries in this class be duly registered stock. Also the premiums in this division are increased one dollar on each number, and in both 1st and 2nd.

On pages 31 and 33 are listed a number of special premiums which will be well for those making entries to read carefully. This is a new feature.

In Division J, Fancy Work, the list has been considerably lengthened and new premiums offered. The ladies should read this over and plan to make an exhibit.

As for the attractions, a good band has been engaged, and other things will be added to entertain the crowds. The horse racing will be up to the standard and an effort is being put forth to secure a larger string of horses for the different contests.

Get ready for the biggest and best fair ever held in Northern Michigan.

Splendid Charlevoix Boy Captured by Cupid.

The Lansing papers publish the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Edward W. Perrin, of the capital city, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Mildred R., to Mr. Walter H. Small, of Charlevoix, the marriage to take place the first week in September. Mr. Small was a member of the 56 class of Michigan Agricultural college and quarter-back on the college football team. Miss Perrin was a student at the college for two years.

Walter is the son of Capt. and Mrs. E. S. Small of this city. Capt. Small is master of the steamer Sterling, of the N. M. T. line. There isn't a finer boy in Michigan than Walter Small, and that Lansing girl is in luck.

The wedding will occur at the home of the bride, Mrs. Small will attend, but the "cold man" of the Sterling must stand on the bridge and cuss himself for being a sailor.

The SENTINEL cordially congratulates the young couple.

—Monotone Herald: The Ithaca Herald contained an article last week in regard to newspaper support of the two candidates for congress in this district, and if there is no more truth of the standing of the papers in the other counties than its report concerning Antrim the author of the article should be ashamed of his effort. The Ithaca paper says three of the five papers in Antrim county are "out and out" supporting Dodds and the rest are non-committal. The facts are that only one paper is editorially supporting Dodds and he gets paid for it, but four have run paid notices for him, while the editors of three papers are using their personal influence for Covell and published matter to further the interests of the northern Michigan candidate without being paid for it. The fact is the Dodd's people are beginning to see the trend of popular opinion, rolling steadily up for Covell and to the anger of their disappointment are throwing mud and resorting to untruthful stories.

A Political Vendetta

By WELDON J. COBB

CHAPTER IV.

The last year of a century, the last day of the year, the last hour of the day with the winter sunset, and a cozy scene, Gideon Hope stood alone, awaiting the final token of power that was to make him master of vital situation!

It was six months after the sealing of that strange compact which, clothed a pale young girl's sterling confidence, had bound to him the Tremaine, father and daughter, with links of steel, for weal or woe.

This had happened:

All that tragic story of a beloved brother's cruel assassination Hope had told—the dark conspiracy, the well founded probabilities of the secret culpability of Percival Keene he had told Mary.

That this man, waxed rich and powerful by some mystery of Luck—or, through sinister means, made master of millions and prime king of a vast industrial combination, was known to Mary. "Percy Y. Kane," there could not be the slightest doubt.

Such by luck, hair by hour from the office of his political subordinate, Gideon Hope had traced this ex-magnate of the rotten Consolidated Silver Company's in and out of a labyrinth of deception, crime, and unknown—consequently, to a new guise and a fresh role—he had followed the sub-sheriffs till he had put his finger upon him as the central figure of that methodical conspiracy, which controlled the metal industries of a State, controlled the "royal lot" and ruined the scrupulous Albert Tremaine.

And now—

Gideon Hope had divulged his plan: To degrade, to humble, to drag down to his level, the man, the power, the king, who in lieu for the slaying of the one being on earth upon whom he had built his hopes had been ruined!

Thus it was that the "sleeping eight" became a membering rain, and the long, lifeless autumn—to Mary Tremaine—indeed home. It was given out that the Tremaine family had gone abroad, that the grizzled retirement the remnant of a once great fortune.

Hid in the wills the hidden hand of the master guides behind the scenes worked at derby, constantly, slowly, the wires that were soon to focus on this same Kane, a prisoner, alone as month and dread of the grave.

In the eastern county, the lonely shed that was to fall on the leaf of scale in the Rush of conquest was slowly brought out of the quarry, the tunnel for the rage to hold it to its place was slowly carried through the tongues of rock, the slab was slowly raised and hung from the roof, the rope was rove to it, and slowly taken through the miles of hollow to the great iron rings.

All being made ready, with much labor and the hour was come, the action was assumed in the dead of the night, and the sheriffs and as that was to never be rope from the great iron ring was put into his hand, and he strode with it, and the rope grated, and rushed away and the rolling fell.

So, in the year of the Lord Hope—the man with a purpose—all the work, near and far, had tended to the end was being accomplished, and in an instant the blow was to be struck, and the end of Percy Kane's stronghold was to drop in upon him!

Midnight!

Gideon Hope stood where a ledge of rock fir-fringed to the extent of a semicircle, looked out upon a few, lonely, pasture—dreary, lonely, a stretch that would have awed and puzzled the ambitious builder.

The moonlight shone like day. It irradiated a wan scene, a scene that the eye could see with dots, spotches, cold bluish patches, an unused blast furnace, opening its hot, molten throat to shed out and upgrade the ore of special fire, there—and everywhere—the myriad coke ovens, answered to shed a dazzling sheet of red, scathing clinders.

The scene had spread it at his feet—for good or bad, it lay before him! When he ordered, at the end of the hidden manuscript vim, how he a master hand at breeding and direction, had sent into the world a scheme which in that valley as pupils to his designs—he, a being of will and resources—he, a being of will and resources—he, a being of will and resources

THE G. O. P. PLATFORM

Fine Pronouncement of Republican Principles.

DOCUMENT A PATRIOTIC ONE.

Declares For Tariff Revision and the Continued Protection of American Industry—For Postal Savings Banks and Control of Trusts.

The Republican platform adopted at Chicago is one of the best pronouncements of party principles that the Republican party has made since its first platform was formulated in 1856. Nothing issue of government service is omitted, no subject is straddled and from one end to the other there is not a paragraph or a sentence that carries aversion or that can be considered as a mere platitude.

The platform, in the first place, naturally calls attention to the record of the party and particularly to the work of the general administration. It says, "The Republican party has reached its highest service during the leadership of Theodore Roosevelt," and with that service as a basis the party proposes to go on and build up a still stronger structure and to place our government still higher than even the foremost position which it now occupies among the nations of the world.

A paragraph is given calling attention to the legislation of recent congresses, particularly as it affects labor, saying:

"The many wise and progressive measures adopted at recent sessions of congress have demonstrated the patriotic reserve of Republican leadership in the legislative department to keep step in the forward march toward better government."

On the tariff question the plank reads as follows:

The Republican party declares unequivocally for a revision of the tariff by a special session of congress immediately following the inauguration of the next Republican President, to the steps already taken to this end by the action assigned to the appropriate committees of congress which are now investigating the operation and effect of existing schedules. All tariff legislation for the principle of protection is but maintained by the Republican party, which stands for the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries. We favor the establishment of maximum and minimum rates to be administered by the president under limitations fixed in the tariff law, authorizing him to make the discriminations by which countries unfair American goods enforce their markets and the minimum to represent the normal measure of protection at home, the aim and purpose of the Republican policy being not only to preserve without excessive duties but security against foreign competition to American industry and American labor and products are entitled, but also to maintain the high standard of living of the wage earners of this country, which are the most direct beneficiaries of the protective system.

Regarding the currency question, the platform approves of the emergency measure adopted during the last session of congress and believes that the new law will protect the country from a repetition of any financial stringency. The platform declares for the establishment of a postal savings bank system.

The plank concerning injunctions reads as follows:

The Republican party will uphold at all times the authority and integrity of the courts and federal judges, and will oppose any effort that seeks to enforce their process and to process life, liberty and property shall be preserved inviolate. We favor the enactment of law to define and declare in the federal courts with respect to the issuance of the writ of injunction should be more accurately defined by statute and that no injunction or temporary restraining order should be issued without notice except where irreparable injury would result from delay, in which case a speedy hearing thereafter should be granted.

Other planks refer to the American farmer, the rights of the miner, the transportation and waterways, the army and navy, the merchant marine, civil service and public health.

A further of issues is advocated, as is also the immediate admission of the territories of New Mexico and Arizona as separate states.

Every voter throughout the land should obtain a complete copy of the platform and read it from one end to the other and compare it with the Democratic platform, which, though it may resemble the Republican doctrines in many ways, will still present very different views upon certain issues.

The Republican platform concludes as follows:

Upon this platform of principles and purposes, reaffirming our allegiance to Republican doctrines, proclaimed since the birth of the party, we go before the country, asking the support of all those who have relied upon us in years gone by, and of our fellow citizens who, forgetting all past political differences, unite in the desire to sustain the policies, experience, the blessings and honors the achievements of a greater America.

Rich in Principles.

The Republican party is not only rich in men, but rich in practical and beneficent principles. It is rich, too, in the pledges, in promises performed and pledges fulfilled, and so we are for party and party principles first and all anyhow in the choice of the majority, rallying around the standard bearer who will carry it again to victory.—James S. Sherman.

Talking and Eloquence.

The lesson: Talking and eloquence are not the same, to speak, and to speak well, are two things.

Human Nature.

Man with our frailtyments as our weaknesses, only one fact differs, yet each believes his own.—Pope.

THE COLORED VOTER.

The Republican Party is a Party of American Citizens.

"The republican from Illinois (Mr. Rainey) in his speech on Feb. 11 said the following statement, referring to Senator Foraker:

"There is only one man in the Republican party who is spoken of as a candidate who really represents anything, and he represents money and negroes.

Further along he says:

"You must take care of the negro vote, and you can't do it when you turn down Foraker. If you turn him down, if you do not nominate him—and he is the only man who is making a real fight for anything except the nomination—it will be necessary for you to leap every negro north of the Mason and Dixon line in order to get him to vote the Republican ticket."

And further:

"The Republican party making a campaign without money and without negroes would present a pitiable spectacle in this country."

Referring for a moment to that portion of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. Rainey) in which he not only casts indecorous upon the splendid character and purposes of the senior senator from Ohio [Mr. Foraker], but in which he also characterizes every negro north of the Mason and Dixon line as being a purchasable quantity and alludes to the fact that he belongs to the national Democratic party because it is a "white man's party" and always will be let us say that I am amply proof of the fact that the Republican party is not a "white man's party" but is a party composed of American citizens regardless of nationality or color. It is a party that believes that the principles of the constitution of the United States should be as potent south of the Mason and Dixon line as north of that imaginary line. It believes that every section of the constitution should be included and in no sense limited. It stands for human rights and insists that the guarantees of civil and political rights shall be given to every male citizen of this country twenty-one years of age shall apply to a negro as well as to a white man. It is the party of Abraham Lincoln, of Grant, of Garfield and McKinley, and, just as they stood for human rights and human liberty, so will it continue to stand, and I prophesy that at no far distant time those states which deprive certain of their citizens of those rights will be compelled to recognize the fundamental and organic law of our land as it was meant to be recognized by the patriots who drafted it.—Congressman Taylor of Ohio.

The Birth of a Nation.

The great, powerful American people, through the compelling agency of Mr. Taft, has passed over so slightly in its triumphant onward march to stoop down and lift up a feeble, ignorant and helpless people and set it on the broad highway to liberty. Vaguely, uncertainly, not comprehending clearly just what it was doing, not understanding always fully either the object or the means of accomplishment, but in heart right and submitting results to the Lord of Hosts, the Ruler of Nations, this nation has emerged in a new birth of freedom for a lowly and oppressed people. To William Howard Taft belongs the lion's share of the credit. Not often is it given to one man to do such work for humanity. Seldom is such altruism in his displayed. Many other honors have come to him; many others will yet come. Among them all none will be of greater significance or more lasting value than his work for the Filipinos.

Government Ownership.

I am asked whether government ownership of mines, railroads and so forth would not render disputes between operators and owners easier to adjust.

I don't think so. I think we would have the same discussion, the same political campaigns. And if we had government ownership of railroads and mines have you ever imagined the tremendous power that you are putting in the hands of a few men? It would be dangerous. The Lord knows that the powers are sufficiently concentrated now, and yet, indeed, that is hard to get the business properly conducted. And you put all the employees of all the mines under the direction of one man in Washington or at most of a few, and you create a power there that may be used to the disadvantage or the safety of the republic.—William H. Taft.

Wholly Acceptable.

Resolution having been determined upon, it is the part of wisdom that the party's purpose in unmistakable language. This is done in the first paragraph. The second paragraph attempts to outline the party's position upon the question of protection. There is no radical departure from the current standards in this declaration. The tariff is not mentioned. The platform is more in line with the policy which congress has proposed than could have been expected almost for the reason that Secretary Taft has devoted practical free trade with the Philippines. The tariff document will be wholly acceptable to Republicans everywhere.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

Policy of Progress.

Liberty and honor do not measure all that the party has stood for and stands for today. There is another principle which underlies all the republican party adopted at its birth and has developed since as the foundation of the power of Christendom. I refer to the policy of progress which has revived practical free trade with the Philippines. The tariff document will be wholly acceptable to Republicans everywhere.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

Work for Europe—Tailors.

It seems not very improbable that the dress adopted by our national judges, which is more or less of the western type, will also be adopted by the people at large in the future. The fondness of the orientals for any colors may give rise to gorgeous neckties and goldlace collars.—Allahabad Hindustan Times.

A GOOD IDEA.

Grange Gives Up Feast to Pay Scholarship in Agricultural College.

The Lewis county (N. Y.) Pomona, which has been only 10 years the subordinate grange, where the quarterly sessions are held, $12 for the dinner served, unanimously voted at the June session to abolish entirely the feast and each member pay for his own dinner, the money to be devoted to a scholarship at the new school of agriculture which the state is erecting in connection with St. Lawrence university at Canton, N. Y. To be sure, the amount is small, but it is not the volume of money that is of consequence so much as the recognition of the need of such an education, says a correspondent of the Tribune-Farmer. Had the grange as a body refused to make the appropriation there were present enough who would have quickly pledged the amount and make the scholarship secure to the county. In this not a considerable example for other communities and maybe wealthy subordinate granges?

The average well to do grange representative is enough to educate two boys in feasts and good living this year, and the development of the grange is better invested in educating young people. In fact, they could do both and not come near the amount Lewis county has certainly set a good example.

We Believe—

That grange meetings should be called to order on time.

That subordinate granges should not adjourn for the last reason.

That no work for the order should be considered indefinitely or unworthy of our best efforts.

That there should be variety in the lecturer's programmes.

That juvenile granges are good things under proper management.

That more attention should be paid to music in nine-tenths of the granges.

That greater care should be taken in hanging pictures in keeping secret the workings of the Order.

That it is easier to keep unworthy persons out of the grange than to get them out.

That the best men in the Order should be appointed to the office of county or district deputy.

That more unselfish work for mankind is done through our order than in any other organization apart from the church.

The Grange in Idaho.

Faroff Idaho is not behind, joined entrance into the sisterhood of granges states and nearly a dozen years ago organized during the quarter ending July 1. We anticipate a rapid growth in grange membership in the great farming state of the northwest, and it may seem strange to some that the work of organizing in that state has been so long delayed. There has been a reason for it, as those know who are familiar with the methods that have prevailed for some years past concerning the opening up of new grange territory; patrons are shy. But now that the work has begun its progress will not be slow.

She—I heard about the elopement last night. Was the father forgiven?

He—I think not. I understand she has gone to live with them.

GATHER UP THE STOPWATCHES.

Device of Raising Judges to Prevent Too Accurate Timing.

"There's tricks in every old game," tritely remarked John G. Fisher, counsel for commissioner Lane, the other day.

"Down at Rockport track they used to have a great system of preventing a fast horse from getting a low mark on—only in his career. Whenever a heat is about to be raced and it is decided to let a horse win a fast mile without giving him a correspondingly fast mark, the men on the inside set to work to get a corner on all the stopwatches about the track. Those men in the judges' stand would have a stopwatch but the same as they have every other day owns a right horse. The horse are sent to the owners of watches to borrow them, one by one.

"Then after the heat is over there's nobody to dispute the time. Those on the inside merely give the time as they run seconds or so slower than it really was, and that's the end of it. But they're always particular to have an absolute corner on the watches."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Roast.

Mrs. Archbold Stonderson was delegating in New York her big game hunts in South Africa.

"Don't judge a woman by her looks," said she. "The most ethereal appearing girl may be able to bring home an elephant or a lion.

"To judge women by her looks is to make error. I know a man who, while carving at a dinner, wished to say something that would please the pale, deep-eyed, spiritualistic girl at his side.

"How do you like Maeterlinck?" he at last inquired.

"The girl who answered, not even lifting her eyes from the great roast he was working on."

As to Stage Fright.

"Stage fright is surely among the most mysterious of sudden setbacks. It begins when the actor or speaker thinks "they are not interested in me." It ends when he determines "I will interest them."

An Important Advantage.

The man who is a stupefaction has one important advantage. His wife can't set up the claim that the children inherited all their disgraceful traits from him.

New Hampshire Lecturers.

The New Hampshire state grange pays the wages of all grandmaid and Pomona lecturers who attend the lecturers' conference at the state grange meeting. The New York state grange paid the expenses of all county deputies who attended the deputies' meeting at Syracuse, and it cost over $500 to do it.

The Essay Exchange.

The "essay exchange" which some of the state granges are conducting is a good thing. Prepared essays on various topics may be had from these bureaus on application.

Business Matters.

Many granges in New York state have been doing things in the business line. Washingtonville grange did business amounting to over $85,000 last year and owns a stock of about $72,000. At the Herkimer grange store a business has been done amounting to over $90,000, and the stocks and property will amount to $25,000. For the past four years the profits have been 7½ per cent on the original stock, and 50 per cent dividends have been paid annually. There are very few granges in the state that can score this record in cooperative buying.

Overseer of New Hampshire Grange C. H. Hoyt has been appointed general superintendent of the Concord state fair. Secretary Drake will have charge of the grange department of that fair.

Changed Accompaniment.

One can hardly help being tempted to have "music in his soul" when there is dissolved in his stomach.

Husband—What was that you were humming, my coter?

Wife—Did you like it?

"It was lovely—the melody divine, the harmony exquisite!"

"It is the very thing I played last evening, only you did it with lard!"

"Well, the steak was burned last evening."—Stray Stories.

Pretty Bad.

Boston Bobby is getting weary of this labor, comatic, postpatetic existence. He says, "Ma, pull Grandma Red-ruff or recovering—Why—er—you see, Bill, I never struck one in dat time before, is it really as bad as dat?—Puck.

"You American dun't appreciate art," said the man from abroad.

"We don't, sir!" rejoined the earnest patriot. "Why, we pay more every singers more than we do baseball players."—Exchange.

Learn to unlearn what you have learned ought.—Gerry's Proverb.

What They Said.

Maybe it didn't mean just what to the conical listener it seemed to mean, but she is what the former was overheard to say to his wife as they looked over the matrimonial reports in the daily paper:

"Well, Mrs. Ings is up, an' that means we're worth a good deal more today's we was yesterday."—Chicago News.

"After all, it's the wise man who can change his opinion."

"Why not?"

The total area of Africa is estimated at about 11,500,000 square miles, of which Great Britain owns 2,713,910 square miles.

His Sufferings.

"Your debts are piling up to worry you much."

"That's where you wrong me," answered the genial but impecunious person. "I have a highly sympathetic nature, and I can't begin to tell you how it disturbs me to see my creditors so worried about my interests! I am so overjoyed they keep up."—Washington Star.

The Business Woman.

The woman in business is now an accepted fact, and the stubborn prejudice which she had to encounter in the early stages of her uphill fight has almost entirely disappeared. She is now recognized as an essential factor in the great economy of commerce.—Modern Business.

Truth.

Truth is as variance with our nature, but not so strict; and it is very difficult to think it requires us to recognize ourselves as limited, but never flatter us with the belief that in one way or another we are subject to no bounds or limitations.

Giving More Difficult Than Getting.

The difficulty which is faced in America in connection with plans designed to get the people of the wilderness money to give, but to distribute it wisely and well, is one of giving liberally. Ideas for wise giving are much scarcer than money awaiting opportunity.

GRANGE CO-OPERATION.

The Foundation Needed For Success and a Few Illustrations.

The grange will do well to give considerable time to the discussion of co-operation in one form or another. This is practical work and something that is needed to be developed in nearly every section of the state. It is one of the most important duties of the state to teach how to buy and sell fairly profitably. A writer in the American Agriculturist of a recent date suggested that the grange in starting in co-operative buying and selling work expect to meet with difficulties.

"But a manager who is honest, shrewd and impartial, who can manage the business in a practical, conservative manner can pilot the venture over many obstacles that may seem scarcely instead of failure. And then he must have the united support of the members, who must have confidence in such other as well as in the manager.

"As an illustration of co-operation we will take Washingtonville grange of Orange county, N. Y. The village in attention in the heart of the county and is one of the largest milk producing centers of the state. The farms are large and very fertile and occupied by owners who take great pride in their occupation. The grange has a membership of 354. It was incorporated in 1905, with a board of directors of seven members. The present officers are Charles Tuthill, president; George M. Hallock, secretary and treasurer; Roswell Sloan, Charles Sloan, James Malone, William J. Malone and J. T. Gerow; capital stock $5,000, divided into shares of $25 each. Goods handled are groceries, hardware, dry goods, fertilizers, farm implements, all forms machinery, rubber goods of all kinds, horse blankets, buggies, robes, shoes, boots, overalls—everything and anything that a farmer wants. Payments are cash and thirty days. Goods are sold to anybody and everybody, which has its sunny side, stockholders a certain percentage off, 2 per cent off regular price.

"About 98 per cent of the grange members patronize the store. Five per cent paid for all capital sales and $8,700 worth of goods accumulated from $5,000. The business pays about 20 per cent as well as a reduced cost of goods to the consumer. Three or four men are required to run the store. The manager receives a good salary. Last year's business amounted to $87,650. This year they started a block smith shop. So far it is very successful, a saving in first cost of shoeing, and it looks as if it would be a great dividend earning plant.

"The Patrons of the town have learned to cooperate in a $25,000 national bank. They walked right up and subscribed to bank stock and now have $70,000 on deposit, and capacity is placed. The town has 800 inhabitants. If farmers only could realize how much they could do by cooperation they would be as bright in joining together, thereby creating a mutual necessity that would make their occupation more desirable and enhance the value of their homes, and them in the disposition of their products."

Another writer in the same paper says: "Until a sort is made we shall not know what we have got to come unless, how many hundreds of sales have been made and how many hundred speakers of marked ability and how many business enterprises there are in grange that are paying good returns which perhaps for years never paid a dollar in dividends. We cannot hope to jump into a big business at once, but would it be advisable if we could, but if the farmers of one grange or of one Pomona grange will get one firm committee to operate action, the point is ways and means committee and that thoroughly work out a workable plan and follow it through, learning from actual experience the dangers and pitfalls to be avoided and with a united body back of them, throwing aside encouragement rather than discouragement, then we shall have taken a long step toward the solution of the greatest problem the farmer has to face."

A Good Suggestion.

Sullivan county grange of New Hampshire this year set an example after one which hundreds of granges throughout the land can well emulate. The Patrons turned out in force early in the morning and planted 100 trees along one of the principal streets leading to the grange hall. The commemorative plant had been under consideration for some weeks, and it was carried through without a hitch. The sisters of the Order were on hand to provide refreshing benches and hot coffee. What a vast improvement in the appearance the next ten years there would be if every grange in the rural land would follow this example each year, setting out trees along our highways, remains the New England Homestead. This work of Sullivan grange is even more commendable than that of Lake Sunapee, N. H., a few weeks ago, when more trees were set by Brown Williams pals. In the latter instance the park, already overcrowded with trees, was given still more shade, while already entirely destitute of trees were neglected. It is a good thing to plant trees and a still better thing to plant them where they are needed.

Large Catarract.

"My poor man! examined the beauty client out here. How did you lose your sight?" "Well, you see, ma'am, it was this way," explained the patient. "I was a very well man. Nuthin' fails in a barrel and I got a catarract in the eye."—Philadelphia Record.

The Profile House. Fly.

It has been calculated that the progeny of a fly in one summer could be 40,524,417,346,294,976,000. Great this may be judged the futility of attempting to destroy the fly after maturity.

If You Are Sick

It is because some of the organs of the body are not doing their work well. There is a lack of that nervous energy that gives them motion. Consequently you are weak, worn-out, nervous, irritable, cannot sleep; have headache, indigestion, etc. Because there is not sufficient nerve force to keep the organs active and allow them to perform their natural functions. Dr. Miles' Nervine restores health because it restores this nervous energy. "I have been sick for a year and did not know what was the matter with me. I had no appetite, lost flesh, loss of memory and very weak. I heard of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I procured a bottle and before I had taken half of it I was better. I would have to pay a doctor $25 for what I got for $1 and I feel like a new man." Dr. Miles' Nervine is guaranteed to take it with you and if it does not benefit you the druggist will give you back your money. Dr. Miles' Nervine is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails, he will refund your money.

2,425,000 PEOPLE IN CHICAGO.

New City Directory Gives That Figure as Population.

An increase of 38,000 souls since last year gives 2,425,000 as the population of Chicago, enthroned in the Columbian Exposition, whose 1893 name it now is queen of distribution. The Johnson family, by the number of 1,024, by only adding of the 515 Johnsons, leads in numbers. Next came the Smiths with 1,175 names and 1,186 German relatives who spell their name Schmidt. The shortest surnamed in the new book are Ek and Ex, and the most appealing are Sunshine and Cuyawah. Edward Pat and Thomas Lean dwell quietly within the same pages, and Frank Broke seems to exist without envy of Samuel Rich. The names of Philip Garlic and John Onions are enough to start tears in the eyes of Edward Onion and cards by Charles Enough. Frederick Dumpy is a dry goods salesman and Morris Pity sells butter.

GOLD CRAZED CREW REBELS

Mutiny on a Whaler at Nome Quelled Only After a Hard Battle.

The crew of the whaler Beaufort, owned by Lathan & Co., San Francisco, mutinied at Port Clarence, near Nome, Alaska, and for an hour there was a fierce fight between Capt. James A. Tilton and his officers and twenty-two members of the crew. The captain finally won, and the crew is now in irons. This mutiny followed an attempt to desert the vessel by the Indian pilot, who, the crew had became aware, and wants, to be just where he can be in the gold rush. Upon the refusal of Capt. Tilton to comply with their demands they set fire to the ship and if he was seen, he became before the officers and a few loyal sailors were able to put out the fire by hard work at the pumps.

FOUR CHILDREN DIE IN FIRE.

Victims Caught in Tenement Blaze Which Seriously Injures Five.

Four children were burned to death and five persons were seriously injured in a fire, which practically destroyed a five-story tenement building on East 112th street, New York. The family of James Smith fell to the top floor to escape the fire. When the firemen had been with difficulty guided by firemen found the burned bodies of the four juvenile children of the family. Several of the tenants leaped from windows and were seriously injured.

Two Wait for Thieves: Sinks.

Covered with bruises, the bodies of Chauncey Cameron and Frank McDowell, of the Hotel Sinclair, Helena, Mont., were found in a meadow on the outskirts of the town. The two officers were sent out the other night to watch for chicken and vegetable thieves. There was every evidence that the two officers had been beaten to death.

Boiler Explodes in Mill.

Eight men were killed, nearly a score of others seriously injured and thousands of dollars' worth of property was damaged by the explosion of a boiler in the Lockport, N. Y., rolling mill. The mill had been closed for about a week, and only the crew was in operation. Bradley for Governor.

As primary election day approaches, the utter folly of the Warner third term campaign becomes every day more apparent from every standpoint.

In respect of public services Gov. Warner cannot measure up to a standard that to any degree justifies his claim. Fred M. Warner is not large enough to fit into the proposition without leaving a large area of space on all sides. His claims are preposterous. There is not one single argument that can be brought to sustain the proposition that he should be continued in the executive office a third term.

From the standpoint of good politics the folly of the movement is particularly conspicuous, and the danger criminal. We would not at this time say that Gov. Warner cannot be elected if he carries the primaries, but there are those who entertain grave doubts.

Against Gov. Warner there is but one candidate who has developed any strength worth mentioning, and that is Dr. J. B. Bradley. In all parts of the State Dr. Bradley is gaining ground. He is waging a clean, manly, dignified fight for the primaries, because he is a clean, manly and dignified gentleman, with a recognized ability wherever known.

Dr. Bradley stands for every proposition of reform that the people demand, and, if elected he has the brains and the courage to put them into execution.

Republicans should weigh well the critical conditions that confront the party, and cast their vote on the safe side.

Dr. J. B. Bradley.

Dr. J. B. Bradley who seeks the Republican nomination for governor, has been in correspondence for several months with Gifford Pinchot, the government forester, with an idea of perfecting a plan for the reforestation of the timber lands of Michigan. That it will be less than a quarter of a century before all the pine in this county has be converted into lumber is a recognized fact. Dr. Bradley, who has seen Michigan brought from the greatest pine lumber producing region of the world to almost nothing is imbued with the idea of reforestation, and the creating of new fortunes to be made by intelligent lumbering. If the Eaton Rapids man is elected governor he will devote all his energies towards securing the necessary legislation for the reforestation of the state with government aid.

It is a remarkable thing that two physicians are seeking office for the two highest offices in the state. Dr. J. B. Bradley, of Eaton Rapids, wishes to be the next Republican governor, while Dr. J. Henry Carstens, one of the most prominent surgeons of the state, desires to become the next mayor of Detroit on the Republican ticket. It is a fine commentary of the intelligent judgment of hundreds of unimpeachable character and reputation who occupy executive chairs. One thing is certain, whether these men are successful or not they will gather around their standard the honest, decent, clean thinking voters of all parties.

One of the singular features of the third term campaign in the upper peninsula, by the present incumbent of the gubernatorial chair, is the fact that he is supported by the Cleveland-Gillis iron Mine, and much stress is laid upon this powerful support. In view of the returns received at the Bradley headquarters in Detroit, it would seem as though this outfit were in a good deal of the same fix as the monkey who scratched his own ribs to produce laughter. It is 4 to 1 that Bradley will carry Marquette county.

A tobacco letter received at the Bradley headquarters at Detroit on Monday, points out the fact that the gubernatorial contest summers itself down to a fight between Bradley and Warner. Every vote cast for Earle is a vote lost to those who wish to defeat the third term candidate. It is absolutely certain that Earle will not receive 20 per cent of the votes, therefore the nomination will be made at the primary sept. 1st, for which one must enroll Saturday, August 29.

During the past week Dr. J. B. Bradley has been campaigning in the upper peninsula with results more than surpassing his most sanguine expectations. Despite the fact that the Warner press bureau, under the guise of the Direct Nomination League, has put complimentary, if not, too, unbased individuals have figured that Bradley will carry Chippewa county by an effective majority, and Marquette, Iapiming and Negaunee, all report the same.

State Senator Ming.

Hon. Fred Ming, of Cheboygan, State Senator from this, the 29th district, was in town Monday and gave the SENTINEL a call.

Senator Ming is again a candidate for the senatorship, and, as he has served but one term, he is entitled to a re election. His record is without a blemish, and his standing in the Senate was in all respects a credit to his district and an honor to him.

Of course our readers are aware of the fact that Senator Ming is officially new to Charlevoix county, the recent reapportionment placing us in the Cheboygan district. Here are some of the things that Senator Ming stands for:

He believes that the law relative to the state tax lands should be so amended that the actual home seeker should have first preference, and that these lands should not be sold to tax-title sharks to be denuded of timber by them, and again returned to the state a barren waste. But the portion of these lands that are not homesteaded should be deeded to the counties in which they lie, to be used by such counties for internal improvement, such as road and bridge building; for 95 per cent of these lands lie in the newer counties of the state.

That all property should bear its just proportion of taxes, no more nor less, and that all corporate property should be assessed under the same law as the farms, homes and business places are assessed.

That the regulation of the express companies in this state should come under the supervision of the state railway commissioners as other common carriers.

He believes that all bills introduced in the legislature should be open to free and fair discussion before the proper committees, but as the people send to the capital no secret lobbyists, no others should be allowed.

During the ice week Dr. J. B. Bradley has stumped seven counties on the east shore of Lake Michigan in the furtherance of his desire to be the next Republican governor of the state. Next week Dr. Bradley will invade the "Thumb" and if indications letters received at his Detroit headquarters can be relied upon, the slogan in that section is for "Bradley, Economy and Reform."

In the copper country which Dr. Bradley has visited up to date, there is almost a total absence of the third term sentiment. The man who blasts nature to secure her treasures, even to the depth of a mile, has a pretty good general idea of the worth of an individual, and when the acid test is applied, Bradley is not the individual who fails to meet it.

The break fast table greeted the Hansen family with most elaborate decorations, and the guests of the house vied with each other during the day in doing honor to the event. The Beaver Hotel has more people this year than ever.

—Frank N. Clark, Superintendent of U. S. fish hatcheries in Michigan, arrived Monday and conferred with Charlevoix fishermen concerning close season spawn fishing. On Tuesday he went to Beaver Island on the same mission. The plan of operation will be the same as formerly. There has been much criticism of Mr. Clark in the matter of spawn gathering—criticism that really passed the limits of honorable protest. Mr. Clark is an honest man, who does his duty as he sees it, with a due regard for justice and his "job." We have known him intimately for twenty years, and we know whereof we speak. But don't run up against that big broad jaw in that chinese face of Frank N. Clark. He knows his business; he is conscious of his own rectitude, and criticism rolls off him like water off a duck's back.

—Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin will never cease to be popular. Some people laugh when they hear it is coming, but, nevertheless, the people like it, and they will go and see it, ad infinitum. There is something about it that hypnotizes the public. It will exhibit in a tent on the north side, August 31st.

—An entertainment will be given by Miss Nannie Barlee, at the residence of Mrs. O. A. Scurr, on Park Ave., Monday evening, Aug. 31, at 8 o'clock. Miss Barlee has given a number of entertainments in Charlevoix and vicinity, and her ability in rendering the stories in the colored dialect is well known to our people. It is a privilege to hear her, and no one should miss the opportunity. Admission 35 cents.

OPERA HOUSE ATTRACTIONS.

On Friday night, Aug. 28, Fred Conrad's latest success, "A Dangerous Friend."

On Thursday night, Sept. 3, that beautiful play dramatized from Charlotte Bronte's great novel, "Jane Eyre."

These are two of the best plays that Charlevoix will get this year.

LAF-A-LOT THEATER.

McDonald, Stoddard & McDonald, the big 3, are at the Laf-a-lot this week. To say they are clever is putting it very mild. The program ran very smooth, with a clever act by Maybelle and Eloise Caire, song by Miss Browning, and pictures, but when the "big 3" hit the stage, pandemonium broke loose, and the audience was in a state of the most hilarious excitement witnessed here this season. Charlevoix is in luck to get an act of this kind, as it is far above the average.

FAGAN'S THEATER.

Fagan's, the pioneer Electric Theater, is playing to full houses every night, and no better testimonial could be asked for this popular theatre. The program is always clean and up-to-date with an entire change each night. The Passion Play, last Saturday afternoon and evening, was a success, as was manifest by the packed house. The public is assured of the best to be procured in motion pictures at Fagan's.

Thrill an Audience.

The American drama is now in the ascendant and American writers are reaping a rich harvest. Look over the list of plays produced during the last two seasons, "The Man of the Hour," "The Squawman," "The Lion and the Mouse," "My Boy, Jack," "The Witching Hour," "Hall in Full," "A Dangerous Friend," "The Man from Home," and "The Wolf," all American plays, produced without a cur load of scenery and all of short cists. The author who can build a plot around six or seven characters and concentrate enough power in them to hold and thrill an audience for an evenings entertainment, is the man or woman long sought for. Even Mrs. Fisk, in "Mismarriage," carries a company of only five people besides herself. Kyle Dallas and Margaret Illington, in "The Thief," require only seven people including themselves. It has now been proven that good plays do not require large casts and car loads of scenery. The public is tired of so much stage junk which only serves to cover up bad or inferior plays. They want quality and that want is now being filled by a number of clever men. One of the list of successful plays, "A Dangerous Friend," by Frank G. Conrad, will be at the Charlevoix Theater, Friday night, Aug. 28.

ALL VOTERS

Enrollment and Registration, Saturday August 29.

Enrollment and registration will take place on Saturday, August 29. Every voter must be registered and enrolled on that day or cannot vote at the primary election, on September 1, for the nomination of governor, lieutenant governor, congressman, senator, representative in the legislature or any county officer. The boards of registration will sit, on August 29, to register and enroll voters, at the places in the several wards in the city designated by the common council. In the township and villages, the boards will meet at the places properly designated.

If a voter is already enrolled, he need not be re-enrolled. If a voter can not apply for enrollment in person, he may do so by a written application, placed in the hands of the board, during its sitting, which application must contain name, residence, party affiliation, signature, date and the words: I hereby apply for primary election enrollment.

Peculiar Political Journalism.

The Boyne Citizen is another northern Michigan paper that appears to be supporting both Dodds and Covell for Congress.

On its first page appears an article, from the pen of the editor, strongly advocating the cause of Mr. Dodds.

On another page is printed another article in support of Mr. Covell. Probably this is an "ad," as it is signed "A Friend of Covell."

This sort of journalism is a disease it to the profession. We will either support a man, or we will not! Mr. Dodds could not buy a line in this paper, neither could Mr. Warner.

It may be a matter of business with the candidate, but it is a matter of journalistic honor with the editor, and should be so regarded.

Coming Soon.

Of all the great American plays, the old historical drama, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," has the strongest hold on the public. This is beyond question one of the best plays ever written, hence the warm place it retains in the hearts of the people of every city. The greatest production that this American play has ever had will be given at Charlevoix, August 31st, on the north side, under the management of John E. Stowe. Mr. Stowe's company numbers some fifty people, traveling in their own special train of cars and showing under a monster water-proof tent seating two thousand people, which includes five hundred reserved opera chairs. Everything new on their western tour this season, and it is safe to say that it is the largest and best Uncle Tom's Cabin company in the world. The musical features include a military band of twenty soloists under the personal direction of Professor Haywotte, and an operatic orchestra of ten pieces.

Shall It Be Covell?

The most important element in the forthcoming primary election is that involving the congressional nomination—that is to say, the most important question locally.

We cannot understand why there should be any uncertainty in the minds of Northern Michigan voters on this question. We think we would be justified in extending this geographical limit, but it is unnecessary.

Geo. G. Covell, of Traverse City, is in all respects worthy, and in every respect capable. This being true, why should any Northern Michigan voter favor his opponent?

We concede that there is always danger in bringing the sectional question into a contest of this sort, because it works both ways, but aside from that question, there are weighty reasons why Mr. Covell should be favored.

We believe him to be the ablest candidate before the people.

—Mr. L. H. Upsher, of Manistee, was in the city Wednesday, on business for the Bitulithic Paving Co.

—The Bitulithic Paving Co. completed their work on the Bridge street pavement Wednesday night, and left for Saginaw this morning.

—The Silver & Luttringer, All Star Co., with the sensational Talking Moving Pictures is the longest playing Tuesday and Wednesday nights at Opera House to good business. The show all the way through was high class and good, the Talking Moving Pictures were a natural sequence of the lines and business. This should prove Manager Bridge's best attraction this season.

The Carnegie Library Question.

The proposition of Andrew Carnegie to donate $10,000 to Boyne for a public library, in Charlevoix is again afloat, and a subscription paper is in circulation to raise funds to buy the site, which is one of the strings that Andy ties to his bequest.

This is proper. To sign your name to a subscription paper is an individual right, and affects no one but the subscriber. But after the site was completed there came the deluge.

In this matter as in every other matter involving the perpetuity of financial burden, the individual citizen and tax-payer has a right, and it is his duty, to think and speak for himself.

That there are weighty arguments in favor of the proposition cannot be denied. There comes to us forcibly the educational feature of it, and, the kindred sentiment of its moral influence on the young of the community—a point that is well taken by those who are pressing the question. These facts we all agree upon, and we honor those who, with truly philanthropic motives, are strenuous in the work of securing the library.

But there are local questions to be considered—questions that should not be ignored. We should not let our enthusiasm outweigh our judgment, either in morals or finance.

The bequest entails the furnishing of a site. This may be discounted as a public burden, as it does not bind any individual citizen who is unable to contribute. But it also entails ten per cent per annum from the city for maintenance. It is estimated that deducting $500 library fund now annually available, from $500 to $750 additional will be required.

We believe the school board and council have both endorsed the proposition. This fact amounts to nothing, as neither of these bodies can bind its successors to any measure.

It is up to the people to say whether or not they will still further augment the tax roll of the City of Charlevoix. There are many things that might be said in this connection that would be inimical to certain ideas of local interest, and we forbear.

This thing is certain—Cases are almost innumerable where Carnegie propositions have been turned down. As to the success of those bequests that have been accepted with "the string," the subject is debatable. There are those who say acceptance was justified by results, and there are those, even in Michigan, who strenuously assert that the game does not justify the burden.

The question arises, locally, whether or not Charlevoix has reached that stage of municipal prosperity that will justify an additional burden of taxation, and, if not, whether or not the future gives an adequate promise of justification.

These are the questions that should be weighed carefully by those who bear the burden, and not by those who do not.

Jane Eyre.

In the new Howland & Clifford production "Jane Eyre" which will be seen at the Charlevoix Theater, Thursday, Sept. 3, there is a great deal of true dramatic strength and power, without resorting to the cheap trap. The action is third act, when Jane leaves Rochester, is one that holds its audience breathless, and proves that there is as much strength and power to hold in a quiet tense scene as in the most extravagant mechanical impossibility ever born from an over fervid imagination. It is an interesting story and well told, probably one of the best plays of its kind ever produced on tour. The lines are bright, the action is kaleidoscope, and the climaxes are brought out as a natural sequence of the lines and business. This should prove Manager Bridge's best attraction this season.

CHAPTER VI.

Gideon Hope had said he had two objects to attain in his visit to the man controlling the patents on "the Kane-Lattimer metal process," to destitute the publishing situation.

There was a third motive he had in view, but he did not state it to Michael Delahanty, or to the Associated Press messenger; the crowning desire of his life was to secure some positive proof that Percy Kane was the murderer of his brother.

He had profound faith in the adage, some somewhere, somehow, of an inclinic hunting clew. Sometime it would come to light. But if there was no such evidence, no witness, Hope determined to resort to any means to finally urge the millionaire adventurer to a confession.

His—Hope's—was the task to reduce this man to poverty, to subdue every ambition and joy of his life.

But to those just, true, and honest, it is actually house to Kane his riches—that had long left, for the left hand of a woman as—Claire Trenaine.

Two days after the peculiar error which had "disguised" Gideon Hope most effectually, a beautiful young girl sat at a richly carved desk in the private office of the new iron magnate of the Kanawha district.

It was a luxurious apartment, supplied with every modern accessory known to progressive business. Handsome decorations covered the walls, soft velvet rugs were scattered about the polished hardwood floors, a large ornate fireplace, oak and bronze supplied each corner and in the center, a massive light chandelier, supplied the place with constant illumination.

Claire Trenaine had been in the employ of the company whose offices occupied the Gideon Hope's cottage she had under Gideon Hope's roof, ever since the train related, which—if you have read the story of Gideon Hope's life—you know.

Claire had never seen her during his dealings with her father; he had purposely kept her away, and for a while even three years, spending her vacation at the home of an aunt in Maryland where her father went to visit her.

So she had been spared acquaintance when the same fiend fatally to reign as queen of the fair palace her father had secured for what he believed would be a rare, honest home, and—Gideon Hope was sorrowed no probability of ever meeting any old acquaintance. Still she had considerably improved her appearance. But this had not detracted from her beauty; the sensuality in the character of a poor young girl compelled to earn her daily bread had left rather heightened graces and loveliness that had at once won her a position in the office, a promotion to the stenographer desk, and finally that of personal private secretary—Percy Kane himself.

Claire was alone in the private office. Her eyes were coldly fixed upon the huge scroll of ribbon. It lacked only the last word, over the yet few weeks. Her lip trembled, her bosom rose and fell with varied stirring emotions.

Then she rose from accustomed seat over, and she drew from soul and face the fleeting tenderness sentiments that had intruded.

She drew a letter from a drawer to which she alone had the key. She opened and read it over.

"Dear Claire: I have for you the information you desired of the metal process patents.

"Of the other information I have found nothing. If he has in his possession documents or record incriminating him, or even hinting him as the Consolidated Silver Company, he carefully conceals the same in some place elsewhere.

"I am at my post. I agree, I wait, as you desire, and I assure you. The ordeal is no severer! Something has happened. He—had I will not write what must tell you.

"You must take no stay from home, something has happened, as I tell you, and I must see you."

She arose suddenly, leaning the letter at her feet. A man entered the room—handsome, careful, well-dressed, typical of "the fops" who had engendered the deal that made a rascally parasite owner of half the metal markets of the world.

He had the same look of command from his smile he—that he was smiling as he asked:

"Kane in?"

"No, sir."

She uttered at the leering, sensuous glance of this man, a figure-head at the Consolidated Silver Company meeting, a being who could have been a thrice in one factory or digging sewers but for his unctuous to Kane.

He passed out. She caught his chuckling remark to the clerk in the next room as he went out of sight:

"If it wasn't for Kane, I'd take some pains to cultivate Miss Hookford myself."

Claire stood erect, flushing, smarting to the soul—contact with these men spiking every sensuality instinct.

"I can not endure it!" she said. Just then the telephone bell in an adjoining room rang. She went to the instrument.

"Claire forget accounting except the business of the moment as she received the message coming over the wire.

"It was a long-distance announcement—from Wheeling, it told of the consummation of one of the largest foreign contracts ever awarded an American firm, but consequent upon the immediate presence of Mr. Kane in New York.

"It was so important that Claire knew she must lose no time in getting her employer to the 'phone to present it to him.

She hastened into the outer office and addressed the inquiry:

"Where is Mr. Kane?"

"He has just gone over with the superintendent beyond the casting shed, to see about the erection of a new hoisting crane," was the response.

Claire glanced about the office. She was convinced that the man who thought here for an ulterior purpose, she was loud in the encomiums of the business regime of the institution.

Day or two of the self-interrupter begins is alight, but they might daily; Mr. Kane might—if he—if he—if he Erroneous Statement Made by a Dodds Paper.

The Alma Record, a paper devoted to the interests of C. D. Dodds for the congressional nomination, prints a list of 37 papers in the eleventh district which that paper declares are supporting Mr. Dodds. The support which these papers are giving the Isabella county candidate is most insignificant in the way of paid advertising. Several of the papers mentioned are supporting Mr. Covell editorially, although they are carrying paid matter for Mr. Dodds. Therefore the statement that 37 papers in the district are giving Mr. Dodds their support is erroneous.

It may be said of Mr. Covell, however, that the papers which are giving him the benefit of their editorial influence largely outnumbers those favoring Mr. Dodds, and it may be said, also, that the papers which are supporting Mr. Covell are doing so without compensation of any nature, and that there is very little advertising in the papers of the district for Mr. Covell.

The editorial support which is being given is candid and unsolicited, and therefore of inestimable value to Mr. Covell and fully appreciated. Mr. Covell has not found it necessary to resort to paid articles in any of the papers of the district. He believes and this belief is shared by his friends, that the unsolicited influence of a newspaper editor is worth more than pages of reproduced articles prominently displayed for advertising purposes.

When the friends of a candidate resort to attacks upon the record of an opposing candidate it is conclusive evidence that they are trembling in fear of defeat. The Coral News of last week devoted considerable space in an attack upon Mr. Covell's record in the state legislature. The arguments used are sophist thistry and arranged in a manner to discredit Mr. Covell for the benefit of Mr. Dodds. At a meeting of the Covell club in Hersey, Saturday night, Mr. Covell met the attacks upon his record and openly challenged Mr. Dodds to a public debate and discussion upon his political career as representative and state senator.

This was a good thing for Mr. Covell to do as it placed his opponent in a position where he must make good the assertions which he has made detrimental to the Grand Traverse county candidate. Mr. Covell's record as an honest, fearless state official is a credit to him, and his career as United States district attorney in which he is an instrument in the execution of the policies of President Roosevelt cannot be anything but commendatory to him and is one of the very best elements to recommend him to the people of the district.

The attacks by the Dodds papers upon Mr. Covell will serve as boomerangs instead of effective arguments against him, and we believe that the people of the district who are constantly coming in close contact with Mr. Covell will not be influenced by arguments compiled expressly for the purpose of defeating Mr. Covell and which do not in any way show to the people of the district that Mr. Dodds is a better man than Mr. Covell for the office of congressman.

Covell's Past.

The standing which Hon. Geo. G. Covell enjoys in his home city and county and in Benzie county where he first struggled for recognition serves as a pretty good index to just the kind of man he is. If he had betrayed the peoples' interests for one moment they would not have re-elected him to the many positions by increased majorities, would they?

In 1888 Mr. Covell was elected prosecuting attorney of Benzie county by the largest majority of any candidate on the county ticket. In 1890 he was re-elected by an increased majority. He resigned and moved to Traverse City to build up a larger law practice. In 1892 there was a deadlock in convention between the three counties forming the district over the nomination of a representative in the state legislature. Finally, Benzie county came to the Grand Traverse delegates and said, "We can never agree on present men in the field, but you have one man in your county who if you will support for this place we will be glad to unite with you on." Asked who it was, Benzie county men answered "Geo. G. Covell." Mr. Covell was consulted by Grand Traverse county friends and agreed to accept the honor if it came to him unanimously. The third county conceded and George G. Covell was nominated for representative in the state legislature. He was elected by a plurality of 2,541. In 1896 he was elected state senator by the unusual plurality of 4,659. He was re-elected by a plurality of 2,541. In 1896 he was elected state senator by the unusual plurality of 4,659. He was re-elected to the senate hands down and a few months afterward resigned to accept the U. S. District Attorneyship of Western Michigan and the upper peninsula. His work was such favorable commendation from the authorities at Washington that he was re-appointed twice, President Roosevelt giving him his commission.

A Warning.

The Michigan department of health has issued the following warning designed to be placed in offices, shops, factories and wherever labor is employed, but as the warning applies to all and is something that should be observed we give it in this column and urge that all our readers pay attention to it and follow the suggestions:

Don't spit on the floor, sidewalk or in other public places.

It is a filthy habit, unnecessary and breeds disease.

If you must spit, spit in the gutter, or better still, use a spit cup. Don't spit on the floor or sidewalk for someone to step in or trail their skirts through and carry infection into the home. IT MAY BE YOUR HOME.

If you spit on the floor, the other fellow will do the same.

You may not have the disease, but the other fellow may and not know it.

The man or the woman in shop, office or factory who spits on the floor, walls, sidewalk or in other public places may be and is often a source of infection to others—AVOID THAT PERSON.

Certain disease germs, like tuberculosis (consumption) and pneumonia are spread through the medium of the spittum (spit); the germ thrown out in this way becomes dry and is taken up in the atmosphere and inhaled into the system, thus causing disease.

Between 2,000 and 3,000 persons die annually in Michigan from tuberculosis, one of the preventable diseases, caused by spitting.

Between 3,000 and 4,000 persons die annually in Michigan from pneumonia, another of the preventable diseases, caused by spitting.

Thousands of disease germs, good, bad and indifferent, are thrown out every time you spit, and drying up, are taken into the atmosphere we breathe, thus infecting many an innocent person.

If spitting could be abolished tuberculosis, pneumonia and kindred diseases would be practically unknown.

Every man, woman and child is entitled to good health if they live right.

Respect the rights of others and they will respect YOUR RIGHTS.

It pays to keep well—prevention is better than cure.

Pure air, pure water and God's own sunshine will help you to keep well, so don't pollute them by spitting in public places.

Sputum (spittle)—the greatest medium for spreading disease germs.

MORAL—DON'T SPIT.

A. L. SEE & SONS, Agents.

Let's see, Fred M. Warner was State Senator four years, Secretary of State four years, Governor of the State four years—twelve long years pulling at the public teat—and now has the nerve to demand two more years, and then as a climax to political aspirations he will want to be sent to the U. S. Senate for indefinite period. It appears as tho' Fred has had enough office for one man for quite a spell, and Tuesday, September 1st, will be a good time to ask the gentleman to take his feet out of the feeding trough.

Hundreds of letters received in Detroit the past three weeks from all parts of the state, indicate a wonderful change in sentiment among the farmers. The writers of these letters report that the farmers are everywhere deserting Warner and flocking to the Hinkley standard. In some sections the movement has assumed the proportions of a tidal wave. Many of these communications point out that for many years Gov. Warner has told the farmers how dearly he loves them, though during his long leisure of office he has not appointed a single farmer to any position of importance, nor has he secured any legislation which would greatly benefit the agricultural conditions of the state or promote the welfare of the tillers of the soil.

Poultry Notes.

If the eggs are all gathered every day and marketed frequently you can safely offer strictly fresh eggs for sale. If not, you cannot.

Now, they tell us that twelve eggs contain as much nourishment as one pound of wheat. You can figure the difference in cost of production.

Medium sized turkeys sell most readily upon the market.

Keep the drinking vessels clean if you would keep the poultry healthy.

Good separator milk will make the chickens grow.

Hopper Feeding a Success.

According to a recent experiment at the Pennsylvania experiment station the method of feeding dry ground grain in hoppers was quite a success. The longer fed pullets gave better results in gain of weight, production of eggs, weight of eggs, hatching power of eggs, loss in molting, health and profit of the hens as compared with those fed by the usual plan of "round feed mixed with water. However those fed with the wet grain ration produced eggs at slightly less cost per dozen.

Handling the Bull.

The advice of the late Henry E. Alvord, Chief of the dairy division of the department of agriculture and a prominent farmer, with regard to the handling of bulls was good. Accustom the bull, he said, to being handled from calfhood, but without fondling or encouraging frolic. Give him kind, firm and gentle treatment and keep him always under subjection that he may never know his strength and power.—American Cultivator.

Good Growth on Skimmilk.

At the Kansas experiment station four steers raised on skimmilk weighed an average of 724 pounds each at twelve months. Nine heifers fed on skimmilk averaged 551 pounds at the same age. At the Iowa experiment station eight skimmilk calves averaged 548 pounds at eight months. Seven steers averaged 565 pounds at eight months. At the Omaha experiment station the best Holstein steer exhibition was raised on skimmilk.

Success in Farming.

Big farming never was a very safe proposition, and it is more risky now than it ever was. The farmer who runs a small farm with diversified crops, not forgetting the live stock, has the best chance of success and of happiness.—Farmers Advocate.

Summer Anti-Grease.

A mixture of one part of castor oil to three parts of turpentine, well shaked, will make a good ointment for summer use.

Cupid's Lament.

Men get fat and grow bald till middle age, and then become so used to bachelorhood that they call by never find in a wife at all. Year by year the bachelor becomes more and more fastidious, more and more selfish, more wedded to his own ways.—The Lady.

Men may, even aged men, be, or appear to be, fond of a hundred things; but cannot kindle an atom of their affections from earth.—Lord Byron.

Holly Berries as Medicine.

"The holly berry has a value other than aiding in making the Christmas decorations beautiful," said Lawrence Beach of Cullman, Ala, at the Tulane. "If one will take holly berries when they have ripened thoroughly and stew them for about two hours the finest medicine on earth can be had for horse and dogs and skin diseases. The juice of the holly berry has been used in my family for years with greatest success. When my mother was living she used to get a lot of holly berries every winter and stew them. She would take the fluid and put it up in jars. When one of us children got turned sick badly, and chapped lips from going out in the cold two weeks, or for any kind of skin irritation, mother would always get down a jar of holly salve and doctor us up. And when I get a home and have children I shall have salve the year round."—Nashville Tennessean.

Could's Keep Track of Them.

Martin Littleton is one of a family of 19 children, so they say, born to a heritage of poverty and place. When he was a small lad down in Texas he fell into the creek one day and let quiet, the next youngster brother, ran whimpering to Littleton, the elder: "Dad! Dad! Martin is drowned!" "Martin! Martin!" repeated the father of 19. Then he turned dubiously to his wife.

"Now," he inquired anxiously, "have we a Martin?"—Denver News.

Value of the Smile.

What the sunshine is to all material nature, quickening all life, giving to all beauty, color and fragrance, thinning even dead matter with glow of gold, and giving true gold itself a richer glisten, so the smile is to human life—a quickener of energies, a promoter of success to hear and giving to pure themselves a richer sweetness.

Putting Away Trousers.

In folding trousers for hanging or packing purposes put the waist band inside and pull the trousers down quite flat, with the outer seams placed as near in front of the lower half them over into half their length, and then put them into whatever receptacle would serve.

The Revival of the Bonnet.

There is a decided pleasancy about the demise of a bonnet. It is a female woman. One coal scuttle recently turned out was as black as the tallest hat that I have seen this season. That more represents the route by which bonnets will gradually retire again.—Dragon's Record.

FOUL MURDER MYSTERY.

Robbery May Have Been Motive, But Police Suspect Revengeful Man.

Artist Neidlander, Aged 34, and his wife, aged 16, both shot also maidens, was found dead the other morning, the former in a room above his grocery store near the western corporation line of Lorain, Ohio, and the woman in the street adjoining the store. The woman is believed to have been shot while in the grocery store and then to have dragged herself long enough to place in the door and made her way to the street, where she fell dead. Like her husband, she was shotted in the heart. There were marks on the throat to indicate that she had been choked. The cash register in the store had been broken open and robbed of its contents. The police have made one arrest, that of John Nemlich, aged 30, a painter, who lives with his parents not far from the Neidlander grocery. He is said to have threatened to kill the couple because their dog bit his mother recently.

HUGE LOAN FOR BRITISH NAVY.

London Telegraph Announces Proposal to Borrow Half Billion.

The British government, according to the London Daily Telegraph, contemplates raising a large loan in order to place its naval competition abroad. It is stated that financiers of the highest standing have undertaken to find $500,000,000 on a guarantee of 3 per cent, to be issued of the floss for the next five years, with an discounting the annual bounty or coaling a heavy burden upon the present generation. If such a plan is attempted it will be because it is impossible to foresee the future developments of the new naval competition, although progress has organized, and the settling aside of this fund would be a determined contribution into terms of peace, of the country's intention to maintain a supremacy standard at all cost.

ILLINOIS CAPITAL IS RULED BY RIOTERS

Five Persons Killed, Many Injured, and Stores Wrecked—Mob Lynches Two Blacks.

NEGRO QUARTER IS BURNED.

After Destroying White Restaurant Houses of Ill Fame Are Fired by the Crowd.

Springfield correspondence:

Riot, arson, and slaughter held possession of the black belt and levee of Springfield, Ill., all through Friday night. Two men were killed, nearly 100 wounded, the streets were full of militia, and rioters set fire to negro houses in all parts of the black belt.

The fire department was intimidated and overawed by the rioters, and until the arrival of 1200 additional State soldiers the authorities were practically helpless to control the situation.

Mob Makes an Start.

All this turmoil grows out of an attempt to lynch a negro who had attacked a white woman. The negro was spirited out of town, and the mob, balked in its vengeance, immediately turned on the man who boasted his ancestors to the authorities to enable them to convey the negro to a place of safety. This was the spark that started the fire.

Special trains were hurried from Decatur, Springfield, Bloomington, Peoria, and half a dozen other towns, bearing militia to the scene of trouble.

Early in the state of riot all the saloons and disorderly houses in the city were closed by the Mayor, and the militia then did their best to prevent the collection of any crowds in the streets. Their efforts were futile, however. They would disperse a crowd in one neighborhood, and it immediately would be filled in another.

Before 11 p. m. the burning of negro houses commenced the negroes retaliated by shooting from the upper stories of the houses on the officers of whom the torch was applied. A number of persons were hit during these fusillades, and were carried away by their friends before their identity was discovered.

Details of the Trouble.

The trouble began early Friday, with an assault made on Friday, on Mrs. Earl Hallum, wife of a street car conductor. Mrs. Hallum, whose husband works at night, was pulled from her bed at midnight by a negro who had dragged her into a garden in the rear of the house, where she fainted.

This was the last straw on the minds of the whites of the city, the hatred against the blacks having been smoldering since a month ago, when Clergy A. Halford was shot in his home by a negro, who, it is said, had entered the Halford home in an attempt to assault Mr. Halford's young daughter.

George Richardson, a negro, was arrested for the crime and placed in the jail with Tom Neal, another negro who was accused of the Halford murder.

Multitudes of men, whose legal soon after the Richardson identification by the women and a great crowd collected about the jail. After Richardson had been identified by Mrs. Hallum the crowds grew every minute thicker, and the cry was raised to take the prisoner out of town.

Sheriff Charles Werner made arrangements to take the man to Bloomington and the crowd in the street around the jail was distracted by an alarm of fire while the men were placed in Frank Taylor's buggy, and whisked away to the railroad station near the fair grounds, where a train was waiting to take the prisoner to safety.

Mob Secured in Ignorance.

Springfield Monday, entered upon the investigation of outrages and the arrest of the participants. A special grand jury was summoned by Judge James A. Vredenburgh of the Sangamon County Circuit Court as the result of a conference between Governor Deneen and State's Attorney Frank Hatch. A large number of witnesses, applicants, long citizens, was obtained during the closing, and this will be submitted to the grand jury at present each day during the reign of terror, and will be held awaiting the deliberations of the official body.

The assurance of General Young that his force is sufficient to render absolute any attempt at mob violence is shared by the negroes. Many more of them from the residence districts of the city come to the armory, swelling the number shot loosed by the State to 400. They are guarded as closely as is the somewhat

IN SPRINGFIELD.

SOLDIERS RULE SPRINGFIELD.

Iron Grip of the Militia Overawes Mobs in Illinois Capital.

Springfield correspondence:

After three days and three nights of riot and bloodshed the fourth day dawned with the city under the iron heel of the militia. Not a sinister mob was seen anywhere, and scarcely a rioter was seen in any street. The anti negro element in the community has been grieved and overawed by the mill. tia, but there has been no suppression of the spirit of antagonism against the political race.

Fifty-five hundred armed national guardsmen patrol the streets and the fever for blood has slacked. Temperance, at least, among the mill element which ruled the state capital for forty eight hours. It is not to be understood that the trouble is over. The display of strength made by five regiments of the State's organized militia, simply overawed the population, which has been responsible for all of the disturbances. There was conjoined with the disturbance after the Second Ward fire, which occurred on Sunday afternoon. The news of the clubing, also, of the Seventh Infantry and the Fifty-first, both of Chicago, had been heralded all over the city, and this was the cause for toward bringing about a little peace.

The most effective act of Saturday night was an attempt to cut the fire alarm and telegraph wires at 5th and Washington streets, in the heart of the business district. With the wires down, the city would have been practically at the mercy of the incendiaries who found firing the buildings in which negroes lived or had maintained small lunchrooms the easiest way of keeping the rioting going. The man who sought have set the fire in the portion of the city was discovered in the act of reaching for the wires. A half-dozen shots from troops who were on patrol in the courthouse square were fired, at him as he ran, and he climbed toward the wires. One bullet penetrated his hip, as he was on the roof of the building, but made a successful escape. To this artifice is joined the attempt to fire the negro section on the northwest side of Springfield.

Overawed by the presence of the great body of troops, the lynch mob has been assembled in an Illinois duty group since the riots in Chicago in 1894, the lawless element of the city, white and black, which in its fury has been responsible for the death of five persons since the rioting begin Sunday, made no demonstration during Sunday. The lib is under the military rule. Soldiers are everywhere, always ready to be summoned from the city is patrolled. National guardsmen, with loaded rifles, keep a lookout where up and down the Boulevard farms. No gatherings of citizens are permitted. Every one is kept in motion. The troops have been given strict orders to shoot to kill on sight. Orders to the militia to be followed to the letter. The big fact stands out that the majesty of the law, as represented in the khaki-clad troops of the State, has been vindicated, and through fear of the rod ammunition which was issued with orders to shoot to kill, Springfield was quiet and orderly.

American Workmen in Demand.

In placing arm orders with various employment agencies for men to work in the coke ovens, the H. C. Frick Company has been specifically stated that negro men will be considered, or at least men who have fired back a number of years. Superintendent Lee of the Frick Company's coke ovens has been sent to the Hungarian agencies to have the men who were laid off during the riots notified that they are not wanted here.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.

Just as Distinctively American a Dish as Pie.

Travelers are fond of say make the round of the globe without encountering a set dinner and strawberry shortcake. If you don't believe the saying, just make the tour of the United States.

The French have a "chiffonnade"—spring onions with a few berries pressed into the top. England has a sort of soggy biscuit crust interspersed with a little fruit, but in the United States you get the real thing. Made of Michigan berries, and the recipe, there can be none better.

When making a strawberry shortcake use a very light biscuit dough from some old and tried recipe, roll out the dough into two thin layers, brush one layer with a coating of melted butter, put the other layer on top of it and bake. A shortcake put together in this way was found less heavy than when made in the usual way, especially if the two layers are easily separated. There is also no soggy feeling in the top like in the body after the was dead.

William Dunnegan, an 80-year-old negro, was brutally beaten and hanged by a mob at his home Saturday night and died at St. John's hospital at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

The fellow have gained a confession from one of the men arrested on suspicion by was a member of the mob which attacked Dunnegan. The man is Joseph Jones, who has been in Springfield only a few months. He is a Brazilian Jew and talks broken English. After an hour's grueling by chief of police Harper broke down and admitted he was one of the mob that so cruelly strung the old negro up a tree and pounding his chest with a rope.

He also gave the police the names of four or five of the men whom he knew. Ernest Humphrey was one of the men seemed by Harper. He was arrested Sunday. Officers are searching for the others implicated by Raymer's confession.

From Raymer's story, the only provocation for the lynching was that Dunnegan had spoken to a white woman. According to his statement, the mob assembled at Seventh and Washington streets, only one block distant from the headquarters of Gen. Young and staff.

There were 200 men in the crowd when it set out, but many more joined it as it passed through the city, and their intentions were. As the mob neared the home of Dunnegan members of the former had to run to keep up with the crowd.

"Putting Dunn good, auntie good, tainin good, is good, and dow good to the whole body. "Harper's lieutenant." Nine given by young man Hattie Cross, Mrs. Hand "The Hand to Well-ville."

NOTES OF SPRINGFIELD RIOTS.

A second negro was hanged, but refused by soldiers.

Governor Deneen ordered the Ninth, Seventh and Second Regiments to Springfield from Chicago.

Springfield parson united Sunday in preaching against the rioting which has disgraced the city.

Fourteen hundred soldiers at last observed the mobs in Springfield and restored a semblance of order.

Troops added the Springfield fire department, keeping a sole in check while firm in negro refuge were fought.

Prominent negroes in Chicago denounce the mob violence at Springfield and declare the law should be sufficient to compel all offenders.

A second arrested on charge of holding slot was released on bail, but a number of men were held on suspicion of taking part in the mob work.

Governor Deneen issued a formal statement regarding the riots, holding to the outbreak, the results of the rioting and the efforts to cease.

The brutal murder of an aged negro by a lynch mob for one crime, committed in Springfield riots, almost resulted in a lynching in Chicago's "black belt."

TWO NEGROES ARE LYNCHED.

Deadly Work of Frenzied Mob Creates Reign of Terror.

Scott Hurton, 65 years old, a barber, was lynched Saturday morning. Hurton conducted a little barber shop at 12th and Madison streets in Springfield. He is said to have quarreled with a white man. A house near his shop was fired on by the mob. He ran in terror. The frenzied men saw him and he was captured. He drew a pocket knife and was knocked down. A razor fell from his pocket. A bystander may saw the razor. Grabbing it, he slashed the negro on the neck. The sight of blood so maddened the crowd, that it secured a rope and lassoed the old man instantly. Thirty shots were fired into his body after he was dead.

Lynch Victim Buried.

Chicago sent 1,500 additional soldiers, making 2,700 organized men, to Springfield, seeking a total of more than 5,000 guards to the scene of the rioting Saturday.

A boy who attempted to board the Fifty-Regiment train at Kankakee was stabbed to death by a soldier who thought he was one of the rioters.

Many lynchings and race riots have marred the peace in the last five years, and the North has had few of the things. A total of 1,030 had been lynched in twelve years prior to 1908.

Self-defense is the fatal harvesting at Springfield. Tuesday Chicago negroes had taken refuge under a bed. He was dragged out and hanged to the street, where the ruffians were awaiting his appearance. Harper died with the rope in the arms of a policeman, but the police believe he was one of those who placed the rope around the old negro's neck.

Bomb throwers tried to wreck the banking house of Salvator D. Aurin in Chicago's "little Italy" district. It is believed the "black hand" society was responsible.

Political Comment.

Mr. Bryan's Speech.

Mr. Bryan's speech of acceptance is a plea in 5,000 words that the Democrats be given power to carry out the progressive work of reform begun by the Republicans under President Roosevelt. This is either the ingenuousness of a native simplicity or it is sheer hypocrisy.

The complaint lodged by Mr. Bryan against the Republicans is not that they have done nothing, and that it will do nothing in the future. The Democratic leader is somewhat unfortunate in a quotation which appears early in his speech, unfortunate although so used it in an attempt to prove what he thinks is the hollowness of the promises it sets forth. The quoted words are from Mr. Taft's Cincinnati address and they run thus:

"The strength of the Republican cause in the campaign at hand is that we represent the party committed to the reform of known abuses, to the continuance of safety and business prosperity, and that we are determined, as our platform unequivocally declares, to maintain and continue prosperity.

This is a pretty fair statement of the Taft platform, and it is the party to be bound to the letter and the spirit of the same declaration. He is about to be running more than either politics or nimbleness justifies when he charges insincerity in a set phrase, and very indigenous, dizziness or nervous prostration. Why don't you try it?

Mr. Bryan's promises will sick women to write her for advice. She has helped thousands to health. Address, Lynn, Mass.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKE.

Travelers are fond of say make the round of the globe without encountering a set dinner and strawberry shortcake. If you don't believe the saying, just make the tour of the United States.

The French have a "chiffonnade"—spring onions with a few berries pressed into the top. England has a sort of soggy biscuit crust interspersed with a little fruit, but in the United States you get the real thing. Made of Michigan berries, and the recipe, there can be none better.

When making a strawberry shortcake use a very light biscuit dough from some old and tried recipe, roll out the dough into two thin layers, brush one layer with a coating of melted butter, put the other layer on top of it and bake. A shortcake put together in this way was found less heavy than when made in the usual way, especially if the two layers are easily separated. There is also no soggy feeling in the top like in the body after the was dead.

William Dunnegan, an 80-year-old negro, was brutally beaten and hanged by a mob at his home Saturday night and died at St. John's hospital at 11 o'clock Sunday morning.

The fellow have gained a confession from one of the men arrested on suspicion by was a member of the mob which attacked Dunnegan. The man is Joseph Jones, who has been in Springfield only a few months. He is a Brazilian Jew and talks broken English. After an hour's grueling by chief of police Harper broke down and admitted he was one of the mob that so cruelly strung the old negro up a tree and pounding his chest with a rope.

He also gave the police the names of four or five of the men whom he knew. Ernest Humphrey was one of the men seemed by Harper. He was arrested Sunday. Officers are searching for the others implicated by Raymer's confession.

From Raymer's story, the only provocation for the lynching was that Dunnegan had spoken to a white woman. According to his statement, the mob assembled at Seventh and Washington

BETWEEN THE TWO PLATFORMS.

The Choice Must Be in Favor of the Principle of Protection.

There are differences, important and complete. Naturally, the treatment of the tariff problem is one of the most striking instances.

Both parties declare for a revision. The difference lies deeper. The Republicans stand firmly by the principle of protection. The Democrats, for once, have put a set phrase into a platform, but when November comes it will be found that the measures of organized labor have been doing their own thinking, and that at the polls they exercised the right of free American citizens and voted as their intelligence dictated, and not as any man willed.—Toledo Blade.

Bryan and the Farmers.

The Washington Post points out that if Mr. Bryan succeeds in his appeal to the farmers of the country, in finance his campaign he will have a fund beside which the donations of corporations will indeed look poor, no matter how liberally the latter may respond.

The farmer is no longer the man with the hoe, but rather the check book. He is the fellow who has been piling up wealth. Under Jimmy Wilson, who presides over the agricultural department, talks in such stupendous figures when he tells what the farmers have been doing that one gives dazed and the brain is unable to comprehend. Why, last year the farmers of the country added $4,612,000,000! Try to digest those figures! The gross earnings of all the railroads look small in comparison.

During the past nine years the farmers have added $33,000,000,000 to the wealth of the country. If the farmers were to set about it in less than two years they could pay off all the railroads and run them in self interest, for the simple reason that pelf will stickthe to the grand total and the country, Congress can afford to let all the rest of the world go.

But why should they heed Bryan's appeal for a fund to conduct his campaign or give him their votes on election day? Why should they heed the Democratic party? Their experience with Democracy has not been auspicious. The last time they had the power the farmers were not long on anything except mortgages. They were long on the plow and a drag on the market. They lost money under the Democrat administration and they made money ever since.

Whether the Republican party had anything to do with it, the fact remains that almost from the very day of the election of William McKinley, in 1896, the agriculturists have enjoyed a period of unprecedented prosperity. They have paid off their mortgages, their farms have increased in value, they have accumulated money in the bank, all the comforts and conveniences of life, have the pleasure to educate their children and to enjoy the pleasures of travel. They have all these now and they did not have them when Mr. Bryan's party was in power.

But the farmer knows his business. He is able to take care of himself. He is slow to follow after false gods. Not only will he refuse to put up money for the Democratic campaign, but he will refuse to go to the polls he will vote to continue in power the party under whose administration he has obtained the greatest material advantage.—Toledo Blade.

Is Anti-Injunction the Only Issue?

Is the anti-injunction plank the only issue between the parties? It is not so found in the Denver platform! One plank pledges the party to the eight-hour and workmens appeals for co-operation now being sent out to business men by the Chicago Federation of Labor, the National Council for Industrial Peace. Mr. Van Cleave, it will be remembered, is also the president of the National Association of Manufacturers. Is Bryan's position in the interest of no compromise in connection with industrial disputes? Has enemy and the Union Forces took possession of the entire island. The Stars and Stripes floated in greeting to the Confederate service.

HOME FOR OLD WOMEN URGED.

Many Who Pass Most of Time in Workhouse Might be Disciplined.

"I was very much impressed with the Judge Hoyt said in the police court one day this week respecting the fate of a place where many of the old women might be given a comfortable home, instead of being sent to the workhouse," remarked a policeman to a Washington Star reporter. "The Judge was the right idea about the matter. There are many elderly women in this city who pass most of their time in the workhouse because they are unable to control their appetites for strong drink. These women are not vicious, and a little monastery work might do them good. Most of them have been getting arrested for a number of years, and scarcely know any home other than the workhouse. With a change of surroundings these poor people might be brought to realize that life is not worth living and be enabled to pass their remaining days in happiness.

"The case in which the Judge remarked that the District might well invest money in such a home," said the policeman, "is only one of many such cases in this city. During the snap I was on the force I arrested one of the fairest I have had dealings with a man for of three women, and have prosecuted them many times. I have seen them go in better, but upon being released from the workhouse nothing to the nature of a place with home surroundings was offered them and they had to resort to compulsionship which did them no good. In the case before the court this morning the women had applied to several places for shelter, but had been told there was no room for her. It is true that there was possibly the odor of liquor about her breath.

"Yes, she had been drinking," the policeman added, "she certainly should be sent to the workhouse, but when she found that nobody would shield her. She very sensibly asked. 'Where am I go?' and finally found a police station. Then she was charged with being a vagrant, and Judge Hoyt could send her to no place other than the workhouse. There are many such cases. Instead of being disciplined, but when November comes it will be found that the measures of organized labor have been doing their own thinking, and that at the polls they exercised the right of free American citizens and voted as their intelligence dictated, and not as any man willed.—Toledo Blade.

Many Different Styles Can do Worse, But Some Are Quite Becoming.

"Fully 60 per cent of all men are clean shaven above," remarked the man who has spread chins for the last twenty years in one of the business houses in the city, recently, according to the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"I do not think I have been seated in his chair and the barber was proceeding, leisurely, to apply the lather, if I was related, that the man who the brush had been thinking a bit and was so mind my disease, has discovered this person granted. Conversation with one's face full of lather is best carried on by the sufferer confining his observation to a series of grunts.

"Yes, sir, that is so," continued the barber. "I have been thinking about it for several days. Just 60 per cent. I will bet money that's about right. You can prove it by standing on any corner in this town and counting the men who are entitled to whiskers. If there is any change in my figures it will show more men are smooth shaven."

The patron determined to accept the wager. Standing at one of the corners of the public square he carefully kept tally for one hour, counting only those men who passed him on the sidewalk. The result of his research was:

Total number of men	807
Smooth shaven	485
Men with mustaches	222
Men with beards	100
Vandykes	22
The beards were divided as follows:
Cut or pointed	37
Parted	17
Square	15
Spade shape	7
Forked	5
Russian	2
Chin whisker	17

"There were also a number who needed a shave so badly that it was impossible to tell whether the individuals were accustomed to a razor or not.

Taught by Experience.

Nellie's brother Tommy was asked in the kindergarten, by the teacher, if he could make a Maltese cross.

"Yes, I can, sir, in a minute," was his reply.

"How do you make a Maltese cross? Tell the other children."

"All you got to do is to step on it fast."—American Spectator.

Dodging Homeboxitis.

"My God, Frank Hoyt's killed."

That was the first sound that greeted my ears as I woke from a heavy sound sleep the morning after the fortieth Massachusetts regiment had reached Morris island in Charleston harbor. After we had chased Lee down through Virginia with the Army of the Potomac, immediately following the battle of Gettysburg, my regiment was detached at Warrenton Junction and sent south. At first we did not know where we were going, but we finally learned that we were to join the forces of Gen. Gillmore, who was in charge of the siege of Charleston. We passed Morris island on the evening of the 12th of September, 1863, if I remember rightly, and disembarked on the low, sandy beach, glad to get upon dry land once more after having been crowded rather uncomfortably on the transports. The place was not particularly inviting, especially as a dull drizzling rain had commenced to fall, and as we marched up the beach our first impressions of Morris island were not very agreeable. When we had crossed a spot nearly opposite to what was known as the Dexter House we were ordered to halt and directed to bivouac for the night.

We had been used to lying on the ground without any shelter, so we did not give much for the heavy rain that was falling, and soon all the command, except the sentries, were fast asleep. Another man and myself had a rubber blanket which we collect on the ground, on which we stretched our selves, putting on guns between us, and then with another rubber blanket over us we were soon dreaming of home and friends and the comforts of civilization. We were tired and sleep soundly, or at least I knew I did, and when I opened my eyes on hearing the expression I have quoted above I found it was morning and the sun was shining brightly. Simultaneously with the remark that I was asleep I felt an uncomfortable sensation about my left leg and the impression conveyed to my mind was that the man who was lying beside me had got up and drawn my blanket across my thigh. As I opened my eyes, however, I discovered that the feeling had been caused by the wind from a piece of shell, which buried itself in the sand beside my feet. I mentioned this fact to the remark, which had been uttered by my friend and comrade, who was lying a few dies distant from me, I replied:

"Not by a large majority," and then I proceeded to get myself on end and shake out the piece of shell, which I found to be an ugly looking bit of iron weighing, I should judge, about nine pounds.

A half inch variation in the fit of that piece of shell and the remark I made to my friend would have been a truth, and I would probably have been left to rot in the sand, if that same piece of shell had not been used for a pillow.

Of course all this happened in a far inferior period than it takes to tell the story, but I mention it as one of the remarkable escapes from death during my personal experience and as the only time I was within a hair's breadth of being by the rebels which was taken with my name. The incident caused quite a little commotion in the regiment, as we had been lulled at a place which was supposed to be out of range from the rebel fire, and it was the duty place of shell that came in our direction while we were there. I was regarded with considerable curiosity and wonderment according to a hero, although as a matter of fact I was simply a passive agent, had no knowledge of danger and could have run away if I had wanted to, because I was free agent.

That was our first introduction to siege duty on Morris island, which different because quite monotonous and severe—so. It was anything but agreeable to lie in trenches, or rather under splinter proofs, for three or five days at a time, as the case might be, and simply sit still as we were ordered and sent back to our camp further down the island, where we had a tent out of rest and the regular routine of camp duty only to go back in the trenches again when our time came. There was comparatively little danger while in the trenches, although the rebels were constantly shelling us from Fort Johnson, Sumter and the batteries on Sullivan's island, excepting occasionally where a shell would go through one of the splinter proofs and play havoc with the men in its immediate vicinity. Our army was constantly making new parallels and steadily approaching the works which surrounded Fort Wagner and Battery Gregg, which were on the northern end of the island, which the enemy had held with determined persistency. We knew that the capture of these works by the Union forces or their evacuation by the enemy was simply a question of time, and we each knew perfectly well that if Gillmore's men and occupied by his troops the settlement of that question came nearer a conclusion, as he well known, both forts were abandoned by the enemy and the Union forces took possession of the entire island. The night before the evacuation my company was assigned to picket duty, and from after dark until nearly dawn I stood with three other men on a post on the beach. All night the rebels were firing shells with unmeasured accuracy, endeavoring to conceal their preparations for evacuation. We would watch their shells as they went up in the air, leaving a tail of fire behind them, and then once the angle of their fall. You could hear the continual "where-is-yer," "where-is-yer," "where-is-yer" as the sound had begun to be familiar characteristic and then when it would burst with "I-got-yer" we kept a keen vigilant lookout whether any of the pieces were coming our way. No accident happened, however, and just before day break we were put into a parallel which had been dug during that night and which a so hardly deep enough for a man of average height to stand up in without exposing his head and shoulders. We lay in this all sat down with our backs against the sand bags and resigned ourselves to the task of waiting. We had nothing particularly to do, but silently to stay there, and for the only injunction was that we should not leave the parallel.

About 11 o'clock I went nearly to the end of the parallel and there a group of us, consisting of the sergeant, the second lieutenant of Company G and myself, of which company I, began to sill the time away in telling stories. Work had got a piece of board, which he had dug out against the sand, and sand against which he leaned. A particularly funny story had been told and we were all laughing heartily when we heard the lookout at the Whitworth battery call out "Johnson" and we saw a shell go up from that fort and burst over the city. We had idea that we were in any danger, but one of the pieces came our way, strung Lieut. Weld in the forehead and took the whole top of his head right off, scattering his brains over the rear of us as we tumbled back on to the ground. We were not hurt, fortunately, but the sight he presented was, I think, the most ghastly I ever witnessed. I set down my musket and dust under almost every condition, by about, by shell, by accident and by disease and by consumption, and some have had terribly disfigured features during the last quarter of a century, but in all my years ago, Thus with liabilities over ground without any injuries, or was and I in 1907.—Iron Hooker of Trade.

NEW YORK.

The prospects for fall crops have made further progress, corn especially being 10 to 15 days ahead of last year's bulletin. Improvement, though backwardness is still a subject of concern. Most all sides, and cotton growers are in the various markets, in large, if not record, quantities, and the conditions of conservation are strongly organized. Industrial reports are fairly favorable for fall and spring. There is still slow, gradual improvement in the iron and steel and allied trades, though pig iron is lower this week, and the outlook is uncertain. Prices are higher there is talk of many mills being soon in blast. Still there are numerous reports of curtailed output and trails those of one leading concern operating only 50 to 60 per cent of capacity. The wool trade has a cheerful tone and fixed interest is displayed by large and small buyers.

Very Poor Politics.

The attacks made upon Mr. Covell, concerning his legislative record will make him votes.

There is not a blot or a stain upon Mr. Covell's record at Lansing. It is a most cowardly and despicable piece of work, and will come back upon its authors.

One of the straws which shows the direction of the wind is the fact that betting in Detroit on the race for governor is 4 to 3 in favor of Bradley with no Warner money in sight.

Granting for the moment all that Gov. Warner claims about his relations to primary reform, there still seems to be this difference between him and President Roosevelt: "The President wants only to see his policies carried out; Mr. Warner's chief anxiety seems to be to get himself elected."—The Ypsilanti.

A great stamp from the Warner to the Bradley ranks is going on all over the state. Public sentiment seems to be crystallizing about the Eaton Rapids doctor in a manner bewildering to the Warner forces. Gov. Warner's administration has been the costliest in the history of the state, and when the cold figures are gone into they are simply appalling.

Out of courtesy to Gov. Warner, Dr. Bradley has kept out of Oakland county. The Eaton Rapids physician instructed his campaign workers that under no circumstances were they to do any political work in the house county of the present gubernatorial incumbent; nevertheless, two well known politicians from that section called at the Bradley headquarters in Detroit lately and stated most emphatically that the sentiment against Warner in his own county was growing more intense each day and that the county would register a majority against him on primary day.

In these days of the third-term campaign, it is refreshing to read the declaration of Gov. Johnson, of Minnesota, who with the possible exception of Bryan, is the most popular democrat alive. His friends were determined to force his nomination for a third term. The governor cut short his lecture tour, hastened to Minneapolis by first train, called the newspaper men into his office and stated his position tersely but to the point. "I have stated my position several times before," he said, "and the situation has not changed. Having declared publicly my opposition for a third term for administrative efficiency, I could not possibly accept a nomination now without stultifying myself and without violating my every sense of political propriety. I appreciate the honor that is conferred upon me by the use of my name in connection with a third term. I am also deeply sensitive of obligations to my party, which has twice elected me governor, but in view of my previous declaration I feel that I owe it as a duty to my state, to my party and to myself not to accept the third term nomination."

Teachers' Institute.

East Jordan, Mich., Aug. 28, 1908.

To Teachers of Charlevoix County:

The annual Summer Institute will convene in Charlevoix on Monday morning, August 31st, at 10:00 a. m. and will continue for one week.

Many teachers have been unable to attend the institutes which have been held earlier in the summer on account of their attendance at summer schools or other engagements. Coming as it does this year, just the week prior to the opening of the school term, it would seem that no very good reason could be offered for non-attendance.

Supt. Woodley, of Charlevoix and Miss Jessie M. Hines, Principal of the Normal Training School will have charge of the program.

Particular attention will be given to methods of teaching and the general management of the school.

Teachers are benefited by the association with each other, and by the discussion of plans.

In this institute we expect that you will take a part, and that each will profit by the experience of the other.

Every teacher in the county will be expected to attend, and it is hoped that every one will take part in the discussions.

Very little time will be taken for Academic work, but instead, every effort will be made to strengthen the teacher's ability in presenting a subject to a class.

The State Department expresses the opinion, and educators everywhere endorse it, that no teacher who is loyal to her profession will fail to attend teachers' institute.

Wages are being advanced, and the standard of the teacher is being raised and the teacher who fails to take an interest in the things pertaining to her profession will soon find herself out of the profession.

Plan to be in Charlevoix on Monday morning at 10 o'clock and to remain for every session.

The expense will not be very high, and you will carry to your work many helpful suggestions.

Respectfully,

J. H. MILFORD.

DON'T miss the "Big 9" at the Laf-a-Lot all this week.

The industry which is one of the best Traverse City has, has recently increased its capital stock and will immediately put traveling men out to get orders. AN INDIAN FUNERAL.

The Ancient Garden Island Tribe and Its Ancient Cemetery.

Just over the hill side from Garden Island harbor, under the beautiful maples, in the midst of the graves of generations of pure-blooded Ottawas, there is a newly made mound of earth. In the shallow grave lies the body of an Indian boy, killed by the kick of a horse.

It fell to the lot of the scribe, last Wednesday, to be able to accompany Rev. Father Norbert, of St. James, to the historic Indian settlement, six miles to the northward of Beaver Harbor, on his sacred errand. The party numbered about twenty-five guests of the Hotel Beaver, and included Prof. H. J. Cox, of the Weather Bureau, and Rev. Father Daniels, the distinguished Franciscan missionary priest.

The trip itself, in a gasoline boat, with a smart easterly breeze threw the spray coast-high, and gave spirit to the passage of the channel. Garden Island harbor is one of the best in the straits region, and its surroundings cannot fail to charm the beholder.

Here beside the still waters, with the forests all about, lives the "Garden Island Indians." The log houses of the settlement have sheltered many generations of the dusky natives. Small patches of cleared ground supply their simple needs of potatoes and corn, and fish nets and boat building constitute their occupation.

Around one of the small log houses was gathered a silent, stoical band of Indians, some of them from High Island, where another band lives. Led by the good priest, clad in his sacred vestments, came four Indians bearing the rude coffin containing the body of the boy.

Augmented by the crowd of white visitors the procession wound its way slowly up the hill a quarter of a mile, where in the limestone the grave had been dug. All about were roofed shelters over graves, one of which, we were told contained the bones of old chief Pazinc, who died more than a half century ago. A few of these shelters were comparatively new and in good repair, but many were broken down and decayed. Occasionally could be found a little grave house, tastefully built, and decorated with lattice work and paint, silent and rude tributes of parent love and parent sorrow.

In the very heart of nature is this silent city of the dead. Not a tree or a bush has been disturbed. Under the great maples lie generations of the ancestors of this boy whom we followed up the hill-side to his rocky grave.

At the foot of the grave stands the good priest; at the head stands the stricken parents, silent and unmoved, but—who knows? About the grave stand the Indians. Then the priest recites the liturgy in the Ojibwa language, blesses the grave, and the boy that was probably as great joy to the home as if he had lived in a mansion, was left under the beautiful trees with his ancestors. For a brief moment the parents stood by the grave as the coffin was being covered, and then down the hill the procession wended its way.

It was a rude picture in a rough setting, but it taught its lesson.

Another Paterson Incendiary.

For the fourth time the barn and crops of John Peterson, of Evelina, near Ironton, have been burned. The last fire being Monday night. The barn, 19 acres of stacked oats, and a large stack of rye, and a harvester and two mowers, besides other farm implements, were destroyed.

Four years ago the county appropriated one thousand dollars to run down the incendiary, but it was never used.

There is no doubt whatever that Peterson is the victim of an incendiary.

—Mrs. Glasgow, a well known old lady, died at her home in this city last Friday. She was a widow, and is survived by several grown up sons.

The Library Question.

The SENTINEL has been severely criticized from a high quarter for its editorial of last week on the Carnegie library matter.

We have no desire to be radical or quarrelsome in the matter, but we claim for ourself the right to express our opinion, and we concede to every other law-paper the same right.

The question of moral influence and philanthropy is subsidiary to the real and vital local question of horse-sense. We have a most profound respect for those, who in the exuberance of their humanitarian zeal, advocate the library proposition; but,—

When it comes to the spreading of from $750 up on the already fat tax-roll of the City of Charlevoix, we call a halt!

We cannot figure it out that the benefit is in any degree commensurate with the cost. There are plenty of towns in the United States which have taken the same view of this question, and there are many towns which have taken affirmative action that have had cause to regret their action.

We have only this to say:

We believe that, under existing conditions, the proposition is premature, and unjustifiable. We believe that the Carnegie library scheme should be smashed!

Therefore, smash it!

There is a "happy medium" between public spirit and common sense. There is a middle ground between philanthropy and reason. The SENTINEL can afford to take this position, because it has always been in "the trenches" in matters of moral or educational progress.

But it believes that the time has come to stop and listen to the warnings that are coming to us in the forecast of the future. We are not reckless, neither are we ignorant of conditions controlling this matter.

We believe that the proposition involves a degree of supercarogation that is not justified. The SENTINEL is by no means groping in the dark, in its analysis of this question. There are several Carnegie libraries in Michigan that can be bought cheap, and the number will increase as the years pass.

If the tax-payers of Charlevoix want to add from $750 to $1,000 annually to its tax-roll, well and good; we shall be compelled to stand our share of it; but we do not believe they will approve of the proposition when they have given it reasonable consideration.

Cable Broken.

Last Thursday morning, while Prof. H. J. Cox, of the Weather Bureau, and the local cable Superintendent were at St. James, the steamer Fannie Hix" in trying to get away from her dock with a high easterly wind blowing, drifted on the bank along which the government cable lies.

She picked it up and parted it. Consequently St. James has now been cut off from communication up to date. The Washington weather bureau authorities wired the local office Tuesday that Chief Robinson, of the telegraph service, would arrive in Charlevoix Sept. 5th, and that means that the cable will be mended about next Tuesday.

Socialist County Convention.

A Mass Convention of the Socialist party of Charlevoix county will be held in the Court House, Charlevoix, September 12th at 10 a. m. for the following purpose.

To elect one delegate to Socialist State Convention to be held in the city of Grand Rapids on Saturday the 26th day of September, 1908. To place in nomination the following county officers: One member of the State Legislature from the Charlevoix county district; Sheriff; County Clerk; Register of Deeds; County Treasurer; County Surveyor, and for the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before the convention.

Dated, Charlevoix, Aug. 28, '08.

By order of the Charlevoix, Boyne City and St. James Socialists.

THE PRIMARIES.

Bradley Carries the State for Governor, and Dodds Defeats Covell for Congress.

Returns up to the hour of our going to press are full enough to warrant the announcement that Dr. Bradley has been nominated by over 40,000 majority over Gov. Warner, for the governorship.

Francis P. Dodds, of Isabella county, has defeated Mr. Covell by 2,560. Mr. Covell carried but three counties in the district.—Charlevoix by about 200, and Grand Traverse and Antrim by 1,200 and 250, respectively.

Dodds majorities are as follows: Gratiot, 550; Osceola, 590; Mecosta, 350; Kalkaska, 50; Clare, 400; Missaukee, 100; Roscommon, 150.

Covell carried the City of Charlevoix by about 150, and Charlevoix county gave him 200.

Warner carried the county by about the same figures.

Gustin, of Alpena, for State Senator, against present Senator Ming, carried the district by a safe majority.

BOUGHT HOUSE.

Light House Department Acquire the G. F. Brown Residence, on Park Avenue.

The lighthouse department has been for the past year or more looking for a suitable residence for the Charlevoix light-keeper. Negotiations were in progress for the past six months involving the possible purchase of the old Fox house, the J. W. Harris residence, and other north side places, but they fell through.

Last Friday the lighthouse tender Sumac was in port, with the new inspector, Commander Edgar, U. S. Navy, on board. While here he closed a deal with Mrs. Geo. F. Brown, for her Park Avenue residence. The consideration was $4,500.

The location is especially favorable, as from the rear of the lot is obtained an unrestricted view of the lighthouse and the river. The house was built by the late Amos Fox about twenty years ago, but was remodeled and improved by its later owner, the late G. F. Brown.

Keeper Ripley, who owns a home on the south terrace, will remove to his new home as soon as the transfer is made.

Fool Politics.

We positively believe that Charlevoix raises more political idiots to the acre than any town of its size in the state; and we do not apply these remarks to either democrats or socialists, and, God knows, they are bad enough.

We believe that when it comes to a show-down the idiotic portion of the population of Charlevoix can exhibit a more pronounced, definite and astonishing degree of idiocy than can be seen in any asylum or zoological park this side of hades!

The trouble about this affliction is that it seems to be progressive. In this climate, with all the means that we possess for overcoming mental deterioration, we cannot understand why it should do so.

We are not sure that it is idiocy; it may be hydrophobia! We are inclined to believe that it is both! If either one or the other, or both, the suicidal mania seems to predominate in the diagnosis.

You could hardly throw a club in Charlevoix last Monday night without reaching the thick cranium of a political idiot!

Positively, Charlevoix should be enclosed with a barbed wire fence sixteen feet high and quarantined, for the safety of the outside world!

The nature and virulence of the malady demands treatment, if there are sane people enough in Charlevoix to apply it.

New Idea in Campaign Work.

It is proposed by the National Republican committee to send the elegant steamer Theodore Roosevelt from Chicago for a cruise of the lakes. She will have as passengers some of the best speakers in the country, and she will stop at all the principal points on the lakes.

Traverse City is making an effort to get the steamship to stop there. If she does, why not get her here?

"Well," he said, "I think, it was evident. He tried to brace his nerves, but he took about all he could stand without a face to meet the wretched, cruel one of his companion.

"Speak!" he said, almost blustingly—"if you know what this means."

"Will Kane answer?" hysterically retorted Worthington—"tell?"

"Nonsense!"

Kane shrugged his shoulders. He had not the misery nor immediacy weakness now.

"You see?" pursued the other—"a story!"

"But thirty points?"

"Which means—"

"Thirty big millions."

"Only two millions! you—but if this goes up—"

"It can't," suddenly insisted Kane. "Rome up, man—you know it! Rome is the mainspring of competitors! A candidate impossible of the hedges of our stock, there has been a scandal. To-morrow our turn will come."

"But the market must!" persisted Worthington—"for there was a cause. We are too stable to be football of the market; then whence the break—and why?"

"Come in!" spoke Kane gruffly, as a tap sounded in the polished mahogany door, and a messenger boy entered, handed him a telegram, departed. Kane tore it open and read, his face grew troubled. For a second he breathed laboriously. He handed the message to Worthington, the latter in turn perused it.

"Shall I wire back?" he gasped. "Kane! what is the meaning of this accumulating disaster?"

The message was from a trusted agent in Paris. "Cable Rock Chrisner and Co. Paris.

"Your stock is going to pieces. It has dropped thirty points in two hours. Hideous rumors are circulating—report is announced that the company is four million in debt, that its land grants are void, bonds inflated and duplicated at two different bond building concerns. How did the fool act?

"How—for it was true! Old, turned grizzly—that he was. Poor old Kane shuddered as he realized what such a revelation meant to his money, his interests, in the eyes of the law.

"Something's wrong," reiterated Worthington, getting up and pacing the floor. His—Kane's—face. "There has been a leak. But—how?"

"You and I only know of the business, but somehow the file over the last dividend," said Kane thoughtfully.

"Unless—copied!"

Worthington hesitated. He directed a keen, searching look, shot, closer to his companion. The latter met the look stern by.

"Will?" he demanded.

"Except my private secretary."

"Bah!" burst forth Kane, a contrarious, boyish of an impatient mood. "Yes, Worthington," he said softly—and if there was the same trace of guilelessness in his tone ensure it came to the fruit now—he, indeed, knew with an the skillful the secret subsurface requisite for the accomplishment of a gigantic crime. Half and his own years seemed to have sunk off his age of one."

"Your office—"

"Yes—she is some—very some—in her way, I suppose."

"As for gone as that?" muttered Worthington, musingly, suddenly.

"Sir," pursued Kane, "science and from the look, the tone, the tact, I feel to my mind for this is a serious, a critical matter."

"You must act—"

"I shall act!"

The eyes of this vexed Napoleon of speculation flashed with determination and confidence.

"Listen," he said, focusing his glance upon his weak and frightened confrere, his soul upon the frame to clay. "Leave me to myself for a little—I think out a way to checkmate Hermerlinski and the rocks. Meanwhile, you look to them who is playing us false in this office. I shall remember the Hermerlinski. I will sell all our securities on the point, and when the trap is sufficiently baited, springing offered of our stock to snatch our—"

"Will it clench the tide?" waveringly inquired of the president.

"It will bind our results!"

"But the local banks—the gross deficiten in reserve—"

"Leave that to me; come to work in five—important! Why, man! we dare not be hidden now. To-morrow's election phase in our not seventy-three Representatives and a Senator. Before this electric day is over we have the key to the State treasury, a foothold in Congress, our hands upon—and on the throat of justice! It is not a State, this country, that we seek, then—the world is our free scamping ground!"

"Kane, you are a bold genius—but I trust you to get us out of this dilemma."

"Why do not trust easily?" declared Kane.

Left to himself, he sat, vacillating by pacid in his apartment. He reflected rapidly—but deeply, and to the point.

"Something was indeed wrong!"—a hidden hand was groping for the vitals of the great trust. Whose?

Something was wrong! They should be loss to millions unless the cause of evidence could be restored, and the shadow of perjury, discovered and their way out. Loss just crooked dealing in the manipulation of inflated and duplicated stock—loss could be covered.

Kane was the hope of the lovely girl who had come into his life like a new revelation of joy and delight, and for the moment he forgot his business troubles and his power momentary.

Again he was interrupted, again a cry at the door intruded him.

"Come in!" he said impatiently.

A frozen countenance crossed the threshold. At a first careless glance Kane took it to be one of the workmen from the cellars.

"I want to show you something—" began the visitor.

"Oh! go to the superintendent," answered Kane, believing the visitor had come with some complaint, or, as he thought, some one sent by Hermerlinski to disclose some injury received at work for which he hoped to secure compensation.

He waved the stranger away. The stranger, cheaply, quick and noiseless, slipped out.

"Mr. Percy Kane," he said, squarely confronting the other, and bluntly, "I want show you—this—"

"Out from his sleeve he snatched a sheet, thin, fair of weave.

"Stand where you are—listen to me!" he gasped hoarsely, "for with this, and here, and now, I'll batter on your wicked heels! Look well at me!"

And in a tone of thunder, the dreadful weapon unfolded, his eyes were angry sparks of flame, the stranger sternly demanded.

"Percy Kane, do you know me?"

CHAPTER VIII.

But Kane instantly grew calm as his. His glance unflinching, he steadily, rather sneringly, regarded the intruder. Then he said coldly:

"Yes, I know you."

"I thought you would!" blazed the other, frightfully brandishing the sheet in his teeth gritting, his glance murderous. "I know you! I might recognize—"

"The father—"

"Yes, I know you!"

"Well, what is that was—true, my man, what of it?"

His defiance and unconvern maddened the intruder. His eyes grew lurid. It seemed he would fling himself upon Kane. He choked, ground his teeth in a violent effort to speak.

"Not yet—not yet!" he hoarsely muttered. "I want you to see a clinch, a fatal clinch!"

"Sir!" he gasped, "Kane!"

"Yes, I'm Kane!" blared the intruder. "You have six years—in cells—you, finish your dazzling career! You—you—you! I'm your child! I was—my—my—only child, Ellen. But you married another! you cast out! And then, tired of her, you deserted her heartlessly. You knew what happened—you knew what became of her, your lawful—you! Sent her to an insane asylum, in the coldest way to get rid of her. The blow crushed me. I was a child—I was put in bed, unconscious—they sent me up for five years."

"Sir!" said Kane sneringly, "what is that, and when be?"

"You shall see. For two years Ellen has been insane—as sane as you or I."

"The asylum physician my son!"

"Yes—I—the other, the other. For you lurked there to say so. You were afraid to have her free, and will you mind Mr. Dick' devil' do you know that your power—My, her cousin, pretended to be deceived—changed all her gentle nature. Remember—Ellen—"

"My friend," suggested Kane gleefully, "I know Ellen well, and know, too, that don't you ever venture to intrude on me—my friends—my—Ellen—I know—I know—I know

An Unpleasant Incident About New Cook Seemed to Make a Difference.

"Has prosperous business men met us on Broadway lately, says the New York Times.

"Howdy do, old man, haven't seen you in an age. How's Mrs. Dayton?"

"Fine and dandy, thank you, and how are you and the madam?"

"Mrs. Brown and your humble servant are both well, but by Jove, our health would improve if we saw the Joseph P. Daytons ringing our door bell."

"Yes, yes, I admit we've been remiss. Mrs. D. and I both speak of you so often and reproach ourselves for our neglect. It's been fully a year since we dined with you."

"Why, why a few months, but we'll fix that date. Suppose you come over to dinner one night next week."

"Really, I can't just say. I think I heard Mrs. Dayton say something about next week being all taken up."

"Well, old man, here is my address. Letter comes, we've got a new cook, she's a comfy. Good night."

"Why, yes, Brown, we'll make the date over the 'phone,' shouted Dayton after the hurrying figure.

The Magic of Odd Numbers.

"Even in the matter of weighing groceries there seems a magic to odd numbers," said a bean-dropper. "Most of the packages of salt, sugar, coffee and other commodities that grocers have on hand to facilitate trade contain an odd number of pounds. If a man is in a hurry and ask for a package of almost any kind of grocery, the chances are he will receive just with a one-pound, three-pound or a three-pound package, but the chances are that if you want two pounds of flour pounds of anything it will have to be weighed to order."

FOR THE USERS OF TOBACCO.

Attention That Plant Was Certainly Placed Here for Good Purpose.

It is passing strange that, with all the attention at command, the physiologists are never in agreement as to the effects of the smoking habit. Even where the opinion has been fairly well established by the apparently well disposed views of the scientists with respect to certain phases of the whole problem, they are wholly liable to upsetting by the latest opinion. For example, two considerations have long been thought to be determined—that moderate indulgence in tobacco need not be denied, and that the lad not out of his teens would better adjure tobacco altogether. It may be asserted that man is not a smoker by nature and certain effects of tobacco seem to indicate, without especial argument, that the longer the acquirement of the habit is postponed the better for the human system. At the same time the remote antiquity of the tobacco plant suggests that it is one of nature's unmerited gratuities, and, if it were not designed for man to enjoy in security, neither is it at all clear that it is to be classed with nature's productions.—Providence Journal.

Woman Operates Alaska Copper Mine.

On the west coast of Prince of Wales Island, Alaska, little traveled and off the beaten paths of sea commerce, is a copper mine which for several years has been operated under the management of a woman. It has been a successful venture, made so from careful management, and the owner, Tom Wyman, is perhaps the only woman in Alaska who is shipping ore out of that territory. For two years she has been sending her product to the Tacoma smelter.

Mrs. Wyman is of middle age, with ruddy cheeks and with health enough for half a dozen city women. She keeps as much track of the copper market and the copper situation as any other miner.

TARIFF PROGRAMME.

Industrial Interests Will Be Safeguarded.

REPUBLICAN PLAN OUTLINED.

After Thorough Investigation a Tariff Revision Bill Will Be Presented to Congress—France and Germany to Be Met on Equal Ground.

During the closing days of the session of congress Chairman Payne of the ways and means committee for enjoining a resolution authorizing the committee to gather information during the recess said:

Mr. Speaker, this resolution explains itself. In last December I introduced a resolution authorizing the committee to have such printing and binding done as was necessary in the transaction of its business and also embodying the committee to sit not only during session of the house, but during the recess of congress. I had in mind then in offering that resolution that we might be engaged, and probably would be engaged, in preparation for the revision of the tariff during the recess of congress. I only introduced the resolution to supplement the one that was passed last December and to give the committee an opportunity to employ more aid in prosecuting this particular work. The main object in passing the resolution at this time is to gather such information from the different departments of the government, which is useful in the revision of the tariff. I cannot speak for the committee, but, as for myself, I do not propose to go into a general inquiry or investigation this summer involving the rates in the schedules. I think the industries of the country and the labor of the country are entitled to peace, or to all the peace they can get from now until after the presidential election. After that is over I hope the committee will go into the subject of rates in regard to the revision of the tariff, but that is something for the committee to decide. My own intention is, so far as I can speak for the committee, and I believe that I can safely speak for the majority, that this will be the purpose of the committee and its proceedings under this resolution. I do not care to say anything more at the present time.

Mr. Underwood—Before the gentleman takes his seat I would like to ask him a question. The question now coming before the house is new to me and, I think, most of the minority members of the committee. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee on ways and means if it is his purpose if this resolution passes to call that committee together during the summer and so take general hearings upon the tariff?

Mr. Payne—It is not. The gentleman evidently did not hear what I said. I said I did not propose to do anything to add or create dispute among the industrial interests of the country or agitate the interests of the country during the progress of the presidential campaign. After that is over the committee will be very apt to hear all people who desire to be heard and have any information to give in respect to a revision of the tariff. In the meantime we hope to gather up from official sources such information as will be useful, coming from those sources, in regard to the revision of the tariff. I do not care to enumerate them now. I do not know that I should if I had plenty of time. * * *

Mr. Speaker, I do not mind stating confidentially to the other side the Republican programme as I understand it. Just now the country is recovering from a panic and business is more or less demoralized. It needs rest and quiet. It will have the agitation of a campaign for the presidency and the next house during the few months that are to come. We do not deem it the part of a loyal to add anything to that excitement or disquiet by considering during that time the schedules of the tariff. We propose to elect a Republican house. We propose to call the whole committee together immediately after the election, both the Republican and the Democratic end of it, and invite people to come in here who have knowledge upon the subject to impart such information as they are able to give to the whole committee, Republicans and Democrats.

After those hearings are closed we propose to do just what has been done by every ways and means committee since I commenced this business with the McKinley committee—all together the majority members of the committee, as was done with the Wilson bill and to ask our Democratic friends, or, rather, to excuse them, from attendance upon the sessions of the majority of the committee while we are framing a tariff bill. When we have framed it we will call them in again and submit our work to them, and, finally, we will submit our work to the congress. It will be a revision of the tariff, Mr. Speaker, it will be a protective tariff; it will be a non-hostile tariff; I believe, putting us on an equality with France, Germany and Russia in that respect, and we will go out with that tariff as we did with the Dingley tariff, in the firm belief that we will bring renewed prosperity to the people of the United States; that we will not only continue to broaden our markets with the nations of the earth, but we will bring blessings to all the people. That is the Republican programme.

Almost Sacred.

Schedules are, of course, not sacred, but protection comes nigh being.—Fremont (Neb.) Tribune.

WORK OF CONGRESS.

Many Valuable Laws Placed on Statute Books.

With the adjournment of the first session of the Sixtieth congress has added to the history of the Republican party. Meeting under conditions not wholly auspicious, confronted by unsettled business conditions and internal strife almost throughout the session by the unreasonable filibustering tactics of the Democrats in the house, the leaders of the majority have written numerous valuable laws on the national statute books and have added a quota to the body of international law never before equaled by any session in the annals of the nation.

In the face of widely varying opinions on the subject of finance the Republican majority has once more demonstrated its remarkable ability to subordinate personal views and preferences to the opinion of the majority, and the most important act of the session, the congressional financial bill, is the result. Whatever view may be entertained of the respective merits of the various financial theorems which found admittance in course of the session, fair, impartial judges will withhold admission for the party discipline which brought harmony out of practically irreconcilable differences and enacted a law which, although it will probably never be called into action, constitutes an insurance against recurring monetary stringencies and their consequent panics. Moreover, the constructive quality which made this law possible furnishes an earnest of the highly desirable legislation expected from the work of the national monetary commission, which has been created to evolve a new financial system which shall obviate all reasonable objections to existing methods and place the federal finances on a basis as sound as the demands of a rapidly and steadily growing country and a constantly expanding commerce require.

Aside from the financial law the legislation of this session is composed of a great number of comparatively small laws, thoughtfully conceived and perfected with much hard work and care, the aggregate constituting a highly valuable addition to the federal statutes, although few are in themselves of outstanding importance. The work of the senate in perfecting and approving international conventions must compel admiration from every student of public affairs.—New York Tribune.

WAGES AND SUBSISTENCE.

How the American Worker Fares Under the Protective Tariff Law.

American iron founders, as the Mosely commission reported, receive $18 per week where British iron founders receive about $10; American bookbinders receive about $20 a week where British bookbinders receive less than $9. American cutters receive double, American pattern makers more than double, the pay of British operatives in the same time. As one of the British delegates put it, "The American can save $2 where he earns $1, but the man can save only 2 shillings, 50 cents."

How does the cost of living compare in the two countries? The English blacksmith pays more than twice as much for a ton of Welsh coal as the American does. The other difference is in rent. Making allowance for this, the American is fully 25 per cent better off." This is what the majority of all the British workingmen who visited our country found: "Foodstuffs in America compare favorably with those in England, bread, meat, groceries, vegetables and fruit being as low as or not lower than London prices, certainly lower than those prevailing in the north of England, which is the great industrial part of the country."

These figures, collected before the industrial recession, tell a story of material well being and good fortune in this country that is its normal condition.—New York Mail.

A Proud Record.

I want to commend this congress as it is controlling the labors of its first session and pay tribute to the courage it has manifested in its work of consideration as well as those of omission. Whatever the outlinking of the Republican party may now say, the impartial and conservative judgment will here after record and truthfully state that in the affirmative work performed and in the negative sense of successfully resisting unconstitutional demands upon the powers and the treasury of the federal government the work of no previous session is comparable with the work of the first session of the Sixtieth congress.—Congressman Tawney.

Democratic Protectionists.

The Pennsylvania Democratic platform favors tariff revision, of course, but it stipulates that there shall be "equitable protection of American labor when competing with foreign manufacturers." If a similar recognition of a permanent American policy were to be incorporated into all Democratic platforms, the tariff could quickly be taken out of politics. But it happens, unfortunately, that Pennsylvania Democrats are not permitted to write national Democratic platforms.

Actuated by High Motive.

I tried to make clear the other day, Mr. Speaker, and I repeat now, that the Republican majority is anxious that the country should know that we are responsible for both what is and what is not done, and, sir, both what is done and what is not done is actuated solely by our desire to do that which will best serve the interests of the greatest number of all the people of our beloved country.—Congressman Sherman.

The Hope of It.

SPECK FOR STEENBURG DEAD.

Lupus Causes End of Ambassador, Who Represented Kaiser.

Bonn on Steenburg, German envoy under to the United States, died early Monday. He was born in Leeds, Eng land, Aug. 22, 1852. Death occurred in the Hotel Victoria, in Heidelberg, Germany. The disease, which was Miss Lilian May Langham of Louisville, Ky., was with her husband at the time. The baron and the baroness, who left America on May 25, went to Heidelberg to consult with Prof. Vincent Czerny, a skin specialist, concerning a malady from which the ambassador has been suffering for some time. After a prolonged examination of the diseased part on the left side of Baron von Speckle's head Professor Czerny affirmed that the trouble was not cancer, but a lupus, and that he could cure it. Both the ambassador and his wife were immediately cheered at this opinion. It had been arranged that the Baron Speckle should go to Berlin the middle of September to be received in audience by Emperor William previous to his return to Washington. It was thought desirable that the ambassador be with his wife during the remainder of the presidential campaign. The baron was regarded as a brilliant diplomat. He had been ambassador at Washington since July, 1903. The experience of Baron Speckle was a tragic one. He caught an infection of the face, the poison of which physicians did not seem capable to understand, during his service for the kaiser on India, the land of deadly poisons. It spread well over one side of his face. He could not have light from the sun, appearing to the foremost medical authorities in this country and Europe to be sad and his plucky effort to prevent the disease from spreading was opposed by the kaiser, the kaiser's sympathy of Washington people. Baron von Speckle was the kaiser's representative at the time of the Chicago World's Columbian Exposition and was personal friendship with President Roosevelt.

Musical.

The City School of Music, Traverse City, began regular work Wednesday in Organ, Piano, Theory, Harmony, Singing, Musical History and Voice. Send for catalog, this will give you a full understanding of the work, and how it is done.

ADVANTAGES OF THE SCHOOL

In the School of Music students not only receive the regular lesson in Voice, Organ, Piano and Expression, but kindred subjects are given, affording a broader view and better understanding of Art.

Classes in which real school work is done, are regularly conducted. Books, pictures, talks on art and musical culture, ways of study, impromptu speaking and personal criticism are some of the elements of the musical atmosphere which should be breathed before he or she can be properly educated in art. Pupils who are sometimes timid, clumsy, bold or careless, soon change to ideas of strength, culture and refinement when the are the better way and come in contact with higher standards. The school becomes a centre where the students invite their friends, the good done in this way cannot be overestimated.

To many people who are well educated in other sciences, the serious study of music is little understood. They are surprised to know that interpreting a fine composition should require more than one or two lessons each week and from one to four hours practice each day. Harmony, Ear Training, Musical Culture, History of Music, Theory and Composition are only "Big names of Things for People who are Wrapp up in Music."

These ideas will remain unchanged until a serious musical study effects the proper correction. Parents cease to visit the School of Music and say "I am wiser. I never knew there was so much to the subject." The surprise and enthusiasm of many visitors during the past year has been very encouraging to both teacher and student.

Everybody in Zanesville, O., knows Mrs. Mary Lee, of rural route 5. She writes: "My husband, James Lee, firmly believes he owes his life to the use of Dr. King's New Discovery. His lungs were so severely affected that consumption seemed inevitable, when a friend recommended New Discovery. We took it and its use has restored him to perfect health." Dr. King's New Discovery is the king of throat and lung remedies. For coughs and colds it has no equal. The first dose gives relief. Try it! Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines Co. drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

ONE important difference between Devoe Lead-and-Zinc Paint and ordinary hand mixed or ready mixed paints is a difference you will feel notice in your pocketbook.

When a given job will require, say, 15 gallons of ordinary paint, the work can often be well done with 10 gallons of Devoe; can't about the proportion usually.

The best of it is, fewer gallons make a better job of it; lasts longer and looks first and last.

Whatever painting you may, for have it Devoe; be sure. Do you want our book about painting? Get one from our agents, S. M. SEE & SONS.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN.

Traverse City Record: Last week the Northern Michigan Transportation Company took the first apples from this section to the Chicago market. But few were taken from here, but a good shipment was made from Old Mission. Because of the failure of the crop in other sections, apples are bringing a fair price this year. Fairbanks & Mayer and Lem Smith will buy in Elk Rapids. So far as we know they are the only buyers, but there will be plenty of competition, because outside buyers will be plentiful.

Traverse City Record: The funeral service of John Hartung was held at Leland yesterday afternoon at two o'clock at the home, the Rev. Mr. Engelbert of the Lutheran church officiating. —We shall express our opinion of the reputation candidates in the county ticket in a later issue. But, after all, it is unnecessary, the county convention, representing the people of Charlevoix county, placed its seal of approval upon every one of them, and no approval was ever more emphatic.

—B. H. Blair, the Charlevoix Florist, was at Mackinac Island last week packing the palms and other potted plants with which he supplies the Grand Hotel. He is annually enlarging his work on the Island, and on this trip contracted to lay out and supply a flower garden for the Cudahys, who have a large cottage there.

—Everything is moving forward at Traverse City, on the Grand Traverse Region Fair grounds. The various committees are hard at work, and propose to make it the big event of Northern Michigan. The committee in charge have secured some big men of both political parties to give addresses on different days. There will be plenty of free attractions, the entertainment committee have some fine attractions booked. Every farmer is appointing himself a committee of one to make this the best thing of its kind ever held in Northern Michigan. One dollar pays for four admissions, the right to exhibit and membership dues for one year. This makes a very liberal proposition, the best one in fact offered by any fair association.

—Misses Flora and Jessie Caldwell, of Traverse City, are visiting Miss Mattie Bedford this week.

—Mrs. Albert Stewart, of Ashtabula, is being entertained by her father, Dr. L. S. Bartlett.

—At its last regular meeting, the Ladies of the Maccabees were called upon to accept the resignation of their Com. Lady E. Tillotson. Her duties as G. D. C. were such that it was impossible for her to fill the office longer. Lieut. Com. Ida Sweet fills her chair, and Gertrude Burdick was elected Lieut. Commander.

—Mr. J. H. Robinson, chief of the telegraph division of the U. S. Weather Bureau, arrived here from Washington Friday to superintend the repairs to the Beaver Island cable. A survey of the damage was made Saturday by Mr. Robinson and Mr. J. H. Martindale, and Tuesday they went to the Island. Yesterday the cable was spliced and is now working again. The cable was out of commission two weeks.

—Oh yes, there will be a democratic county ticket, and a socialist ticket; but don't let that probability annoy you. The ticket that represents the vital interests of Charlevoix county was nominated at the court house last Tuesday. The representation came from the farm and the factory. It probably more fully represented all industrial interests of the county than any convention ever held in Charlevoix county.

—Now look for the democratic assistant, "machine," "ring," "court house conspiracy," etc., etc. It is inevitable. It comes with all the certainty and noise of an October gale. Don't mind it. It is only wind, and will pass along. The sun will continue to shine therefter. We challenge a denial of the statement that the recent republican county convention represented the heart and soul of the people of Charlevoix county.

—There was but one thing lacking in the recent republican county convention to give spirit and vim to the proceedings, and that was the absence of our friend Bill mears, of Boyne Falls. The able orator always creates an interest in gatherings of this character. He has added to the gaiety of Charlevoix county politics so long that we really miss him from the report of the proceedings. It has been a cold day when Bill has not been a candidate, and a very much colder day when he was not turned down. We understand Bill is now a candidate for Secretary of State.

—Elmer Johnson, the city bridge tender, tending being expert and faithful in this chief line of duty, has a decided trend toward gardening and the beautiful in nature. On either side of the north end of the bridge Elmer has a rich spot of earth, made richer yearly by the sweepings of the bridge. Plenty of city water and a garden hose does the rest. This year Elmer's fertile wind ran to cucumbers, and the "cooks" that he has raked would make an ordinary market gardener green with envy. Besides a liberal supply for his own use, he has supplied his neighbors. Some have grown to spad, and should be sent to the fair. One specimen measured 19 inches in length, and weighed 4½ pounds. Johnson has the electric light pole and its guy post, that stands at the approach a perfectly solid bower of English Ivy, and the beautiful green ivy leaves are protruding even from the cracks in the stone wall of the approach. A larger part of the iron railing on the east side of the approach sustains a wonderfully thrifty morning glory vine, that at about six o'clock in the morning is worth getting up to see. Notwithstanding these things, Elmer's capital up at the top, always shines, and never fails to do business.

THE COUNTY CONVENTION.

A Most Harmonious Gathering And An Excellent Ticket Nominated

Never in the history of Charlevoix county has a more representative political body assembled than that which met at the court house in this city last Tuesday.

Every township and ward was represented, and there was not even a ripple of unpleasantness from the opening to the closing of the convention. We cannot remember that ever before, in Charlevoix county, has an entire county ticket been nominated by acclamation—yet such was the case Tuesday. Never, anywhere, has political harmony been more strikingly exemplified, and never, in this county have delegates left a convention hall with such unanimity of sentiment and purpose.

Chairman Pearson called the convention to order at 10:30; secretary McMillan read the call; H. E. Newville was elected temporary chairman, and H. I. Lorraine temporary secretary. Later the temporary was made the permanent organization, and the "road roller" was under way.

After dinner the committee on credentials reported the following delegates were entitled to seats:

Bay—Jas. Dilworth, Joseph Shaw.
Boyne Valley—F. H. Robbins, E. A. Rooney and C. Mosier.
Chandler—M. J. Pearson, George Heger.
Charlevoix Twp—E. W. Coulter, Evangeline—Geo. W. Heaton.
Eveline—Samuel Alexander, M. A. McDonald, M. J. Staley.
Hayes—Fred Smith, Mark Saunby.
H. S. Newson.
Hudson—Jas. A. Waggoner, Ralph Dye.
Marion—J. H. Adams, Wm. Withers.
Melrose—S. A. Correll, J. E. Darragh, W. H. Ronsons.
Norwood—S. B. Chase, Wm. Mayne.
Peninsula—D. F. Gallagher, Hugh E. Boyle.
St. James—W. W. Boyle, W. J. Gallagher.
Boyne City, 1st Ward—Hugh H. Miller, Frank Blair. 2nd ward, J. M. Harris, H. E. Newville, Walter Ware, J. E. Converse. 3rd ward, I. E. Knowles, A. F. Hayes, C. J. Nelson, Geo. W. Bailey. 4th ward, John Bibby, J. H. Furman, Geo. W. Baxter, A. G. Urquhart, C. E. Ramsey.
Charlevoix, 1st ward—E. E. Wood, A. L. Fitch, A. M. Whitmore. 2nd ward, H. I. Iddings, Jos. Smith, Karl Wardrop, Alex Cameron. 3rd ward, W. E. Parmelee, Archie Alcock, W. J. Weber.

Then the "road roller" took another spurt when J. M. Harris nominated W. J. Pearson for representative in an excellent speech. After Billy Pearson had been nominated by acclamation, the speed of the "road roller" was accelerated, every second nating speech being followed by a unanimous nomination.

J. E. Converse made a sound talk in presenting the name of Frank McWalls for Sheriff; A. L. Fitch eloquently nominated A. B. Nicholas for prosecutor. School Commissioner Michford brought D. S. Payton into the line-light for county clerk, in good earnest English; E. A. Rooney moved the name of Richard Lewis for treasurer, and did it properly; Jr. Whitmore did a good job in bringing R. A. Autry's name forward for register. The nominations of E. Robinson for surveyor; A. G. Urquhart for court commissioner, and Drs. W. H. Marshall and A. M. Wilkinson for coroners followed in rapid succession.

Delegates to State Convention: W. J. Pearson, L. E. Knowles, J. S. See, John Bibby, A. J. Stroud, F. A. Hayes, J. E. Darragh.

The program at the Laf-a-Lot Electric Theater this week has been of an exceptionally high grade. The moving pictures have consisted mostly of feature films and have been, to a large extent educational. The vaudeville attractions have been the Vernons, song and dance artists, who are head and shoulders above the average. Frank Ford, the musical iconoclast, is gaining much applause with his clever work. The management is announcing that they have secured Guy's famous parlor minstrels, which assures us a great program.

Old Chief Blackbird Dead.

Andrew Mackatepenesee, called Chief Blackbird, of the Ottawas, first postmaster of the village of Little Traverse, many years a government interpreter, author of Indian text books and educated at the Ypsilanti normal college, died at Harbor Springs Monday, of senile insanity, aged about 90. He leaves an aged wife, a full blooded English woman. He also leaves one daughter and several sons. He owned most of the farm on which the Waquetosing golf grounds are located, and a small home in town.

Blackbird was well known by old settlers of Charlevoix. Up to within two or three years the old Indian decked out in the adornments of a chief, went about bestriding an Indian history and curious.

NORWOOD NEWS.

Mrs. Thomas Crosby, and her sons, left for Chicago Monday.

Miss Lody arrived Saturday from Mt. Clemens, and school ws commence Monday.

The L. A. S. will give a chicken pie social at the Town Hall on Friday of this week. Price 25 and 15 cents.

Mr. Gustav A. Richardson, of Detroit, arrived Saturday for a short visit with his parents, returning to Detroit Tuesday.

The program at the Laf-a-Lot Electric Theater this week has been of an exceptionally high grade. The moving pictures have consisted mostly of feature films and have been, to a large extent educational. The vaudeville attractions have been the Vernons, song and dance artists, who are head and shoulders above the average. Frank Ford, the musical iconoclast, is gaining much applause with his clever work. The management is announcing that they have secured Guy's famous parlor minstrels, which assures us a great program.

WARNER THE WINNER.

Country Precincts Increase Warner's Primary Vote. Insuring Majority.

Governor Fred M. Warner is the nominee of the republican party of Michigan for a third term in the executive office.

When we went to press last week it seemed certain that Dr. Bradley had won out by at least 3,000 majority; but later returns from remote districts changed the situation, and it now appears certain that Governor Warner has not far from 2,000 majority.

Figures on congressional and senatorial stand about as given last week.

LATER—Later returns give the nomination to the present incumbent, Senator Ming.

The Democratic County Convention.

We publish this week the call for the democratic county convention. We do this as an act of pure benevolence. We make no charge because we know that democratic finances are low.

We publish the call at the request of our neighbor, Dr. Crouter, who is one of the very few remaining monuments of former democratic greatness. We could not refuse, under the circumstances.

The poor disconsolate outfit has no organ now, and is, like the Salvation Army, up against public charity. Hence we gladly publish the call, and simply crave the credit that is due to a true philanthropist.

The Steamer Pine Lake Sold.

The Charlevoix Lumber Co. has sold the steamhauge Pine Lake and she will probably be taken away next week.

Mr. Nicholls declines to state to whom the boat was sold, as there are certain details yet pending.

But it is safe to say that the Pine Lake is to change her hailing port.

TWO-HEADED BABY TO LOSE ONE.

Remarkable Operation Planned by Surgeons in New Orleans.

An operation in which many local surgeons are interested will be performed within the next few days at a hospital in this city when an effort will be made to separate two heads. The second head is not perfectly formed, but is of good size and covered with a healthy growth of hair. Mr. and Mrs. Leon Pelas, of the parents of the child, concurred in the operation when their physician informed them that it was the only means to save the baby's life, and the second head will be removed. Surgeons at the Children's Asylum to the Charity Hospital say that the birth of a two-headed baby is an uncommon, but the fact that the Pelas baby still has a good heart-beat, also, with its two heads is, they believe, an indication more remarkable, and it is generally thought will usually living soon after birth.

POSTOFFICE THIEVES GET $3,000.

How Open Safe and Take Stamps, Registered Letters and Money.

Burglars descended the other night on the Washington (Ill.) postoffice and in the aggregate stole a quantity of value the place contained. Forcing a door in the side they found another door $2,000 in postage stamps and cash. They then went up into the office through a stairway, the top of which rested on the second floor, and forced open the safe in the floor. The way in which the safe had been opened, it is stated, showed the postmaster, Charles C. Watson, who he arrived in the morning, to be an experts. Led by tool, but the locks had been turned as easily as if it had been opened with a key. A fresh supply of stamps had just been received by the postmaster, and the postmaster was taken on the theory that the burglar robbery was committed by one who had a knowledge of this fact. A subsequent mass had was begun at once following the discovery of the robbery.

THE TARIFF PLANK.

No Language Could Be Made Clearer or Stronger.

Referring to the tariff plank in the Republican platform, the New York Tribune says:

But if there is to be revision the Republican party does not propose anything that will sacrifice the employment of American labor or the legitimate profits of American capital. No language could be clearer and stronger than that "the tariff legislation the time principle of protection is legislated by the imposition of such duties as will equal the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, together with a reasonable profit to American industries."

Undoubtedly this is the conviction of the American people. They know what wealth and blessings they have enjoyed under a tariff which has enabled Americans to earn their livings—and better livings by far than any foreigner has ever earned—by making for themselves whatever they consume when it is possible for them to make it. They know somewhat that the worst disaster would could fall upon this country would be for a stream of foreign commerce to come flooding over our market, wiping out American industries, destroying the material wealth in the factories and mills and the potential wealth of the employment of the American wage earners. No war ever devastated a country or wrought the havoc to a people that would be suffered in the United States if a commercial invasion by foreigners should be allowed to exterminate our home industries and strip our wage earners. The whole or any part of such invasion that could overwhelm our protecting agencies would be absolutely prohibited by the continued enforcement of the policy which is reiterated in that tariff plank.

AN ABLE ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. Taft's Wide Range of Work as Secretary of War.

It is not important here to discuss in detail Mr. Taft's administration of the war department since he succeeded Elihu Root as secretary of war on Feb. 1, 1904. He has been at the head of it during the years of its greatest range of activity. He was not merely secretary of the army; as almost all his predecessors were. He was secretary of the colonies. Under his direction all matters of the utmost importance affecting every one of the overseas possessions of the United States. The affairs of the army alone have often proved sufficient to occupy the whole attention of an able secretary. Mr. Taft had to handle not only those and the insurgent and Moro business, but to direct the construction of the Panama canal as well. And at not infrequent intervals he has been called on to participate in the direction of other weighty affairs of government. He has been the general adviser of President Roosevelt and has been called into consultation on every important matter which has received governmental action.

The administration of canal affairs has required in a high degree that quality described as executive ability. The building of a canal is a tremendous enterprise, calling constantly for the exercise of sound business judgment. In Mr. Taft has displayed in ripened proportions the abilities he foreshadowed when solicitor general and collector of internal revenue.

An Honor Bound Party.

Money indebtedness was not the only obligation we incurred and assumed in the great civil war. There was a still greater debt, an everlasting obligation that could never be paid in full. But in the years that have followed the Republican party has inaugurated and developed pension laws under which over $3,500,000,000 have been paid to disabled veterans or to the survivors of those who gave their lives for their country and their flag. This pension system, a product of the policy of the Republican party, has no precedent in history and no equal in justice and generosity among the nations of the earth. And so I claim again that the Republican party has always been a freedom loving party and an honor bound party.—James S. Sherman.

The Work of Congress.

In spite of Democratic obstruction and opposition it will be found that the session of congress just closed will have accomplished as much as or more than is done at the average long session. Besides the usual appropriation bills, the Republicans have succeeded in enacting into law several very important bills.

The Honest Friend.

We are all travelers in what John Bunyan calls the wilderness of this world, and the best that we find in our travels is an honest friend. He is a fortunate voyager who finds many. We cannot too much to find them. They are the end and reward of life.—Robert Louis Stevenson.

A True Church.

There is a true church wherever one hand meets another helpfully.—John Ruskin.

RURAL FREE DELIVERY

Proves the Wisdom of Republican Statesmen.

GREAT BOON TO THE FARMER

Growth and Development of the Service—A Great Benefit to All the People—Institution Was Condemned by Democrats.

The wonderful advance of the rural free delivery system under the Republican party was the subject of a speech by Representative Bates of Pennsylvania in the house of representatives May 26. Mr. Bates said:

Mr. Speaker—The rural free delivery service has fully kept pace with the growth and development of our whole country. The former is now reaping some of the rewards he has so justly earned in the past by the burdens that he has borne. He is the producer of wealth. He is coming to be one of the most independent of all our citizens. No branch of the public service has been so well developed and improved in the past few years as the rural free delivery. There were only 8,000 rural routes in operation six years ago. There are now almost 40,000, and these are scattered through every state and territory of the country, so that there is not a rural section in the whole land that is not practically covered. This entire service has been extended from a small beginning eleven years ago during the three Republican administrations with which this country has been blessed since 1897. I believe that the appropriation of $35,000,000 made this year for the support of rural free delivery service brings more direct benefit of the people of this country when it affects than almost any other appropriation made by the general government.

As at present New York has nearly 2,000 routes in operation, Pennsylvania 2,100, Indiana 2,200, Ohio 2,500, Illinois 2,800, Minnesota 1,600, Missouri 2,000 and Nebraska 1,000. In fact, almost all cases parallel during the past year have been disposed of, and when over an adequate number of people desired the service it has been established and put in daily use.

The testimony of those who enjoy this service from all over the country proves that by reason of the free rural delivery the actual value of farm lands has been greatly increased. I have lost farmers inform me that they would not dispose with the service for $50 or even $100 per annum. It has been estimated that the value of farm lands has risen by this means as high as $5 per acre in many states. A moderate one hundred would show a benefit to the farm lands of from $4 to $5 per acre.

A better knowledge of trade conditions is always of great advantage. The farmer is not only the producer, but he is also his own salesman, and it is essential that he should be acquainted with the daily prices of the products he raises in order to know when it will be to his advantage to market his goods. He is now enabled to receive daily duly paper giving him quotations and prices of stock and produce and, in fact, the changing values of everything he raises on the farm. By means of this letter communication with the markets he is able to obtain better prices for all that the farm produces. He can also receive and dispatch mail much more quickly than before. In fact, he can in many cases obtain an answer to his letter on the day following its dispatch. In the old days our rural inhabitant was obliged to send to the postoffice for his mail, and in the busy season, when his horses were busy in the fields, a week would sometimes elapse before he or any of his family could reach the postoffice. Now there are delivered daily to the country of a year's half million pieces of mail on rural routes throughout the country.

Increased facilities always bring increased use and enjoyment. The increased number of letters written and newspapers subscribed for and received has so greatly augmented the pleasures of the country's people, serve as to make the rural free delivery service almost self sustaining.

Rural free delivery is encouraging the building of good roads. The farmer desires the delivery of his mail, and the department wisely limits that on to roads through which the country has been blessed since 1897. I believe that the appropriation of $35,000,000 made this year for the support of rural free delivery service brings more direct benefit of the people of this country when it affects than almost any other appropriation made by the general government.

As at present New York has nearly 2,000 routes in operation, Pennsylvania 2,100, Indiana 2,200, Ohio 2,500, Illinois 2,800, Minnesota 1,600, Missouri 2,000 and Nebraska 1,000. A Political Vendetta

By

WELDON J. COBB

CHAPTER X.

Three o'clock in the afternoon of election day—three o'clock in a nutshell, a vortex!

Every Kane had reached the scene, the spirtlesest, of his career at the hour, yet there, amid noise, excitement, political conference, he was the coolest person in the room.

It was at the central headquarters of the party—or rather Gilson—which he had chosen to hear him, the great trust, as its power and fortune.

Wires, constant clicking in other rooms, the incessant jar of telephone bells—messages, telegrams, hurrying, scurrying pressure! leaders—dazed, dignified, alarmed, jeering, scathing, mob half exhausted after a day's at the polls in a contest that for sky rocketing fever or coolness a great State!

There had been peculiar rumors afloat since about dawn, for at 7 o'clock "mask of ballots" had appeared in the Kane ranks.

Almost to a man the potent Assinipi, matched, white Kane and his blackings had declared in a serpentine, a spell of fiend and influence, had swung into action lustily against the Gilson candidate.

Then up from the southern tier of counties came the news of a trade in—well, dates that meant the swamping of five needed representatives. The modern projects, too, were reported strange and mysterious defections among the ranks of the faithful.

"I can't understand it," anxiously asserted Kane to a powerful political boss at his elbow—"it looks as though our ground had been planted with dynamite and sensitive caps!"

"It's a game, big in politics, then," declared the other, "for we did not get a hint of it in advance."

"Can they win out?" questioned Kane anxiously.

"With our lead, and our money?" derisively smiled the boss—"well, hardly."

It was a melancholy day for the great magnate. He sat turning over sensational reports on the table before him, listening to the statements of new arrivals. The situation was simple. It was four o'clock. For weal or woe the die was cast—the election was over.

Kane arose at the striking of the clock, passed words with all classes of managers and was driven to the principal hotel in the town, where the president of the trust had agreed to report to him on company matters that evening.

He found Worthington awaiting him. A tired sight of his wrecked, twitching face and him that he was the bearer of no encouraging news.

That morning the misappropriated securities had been placed in the hands of the proper parties, leaving the balance that appeared on the statement of new assets wired to New York.

Then Kane had advised his partner he had done his all. Pending strict calculation of the political situation, he was not in disfavor with news of financial ruin—the election was over, the election was over.

"And what has you to report?" he inquired, rapidly scanning his companion's pale face, anxiously—"you look worse!" he groaned the unhappy president.

"Our stock!"

"It hasn't budged from last night's low figures."

"What! The new statement, the heavy buying we ordered?"

The president shook his head wearily.

"The public are scared—scared, Kane, by a night we have spent in! Someone with the complicated knowledge of our most secret affairs is behind this. Strike upon our stock. The Bull blows—

"How?"

"The owner of the united metal mines, our biggest field for copper, has gone over to the Blemenhauer combine."

"Impossible!"

"It's true, Kane, I'm frightened! I'm frightened back! I have been told that it is looking out that we have hypothecated the trust securities—

"Hush!" It was needless to go on. Perry Kane's face was a study. He was the man who knew that the final blow and coup, sink or swim, was

Yet to come.

In his mind at that moment was a quick, cold suggestion he treasured for the emergency, if, for the sake of his wife, what of ruin he could secure, if she had ended with no change in the situation.

Kane drank deeply the few remaining hours of daylight. He managed to get out of his long, weak financial colleagues, and—bright more congenial company—among his political friends.

Seven o'clock found "a one of a group of half a dozen choice party leaders occupying a room in the hotel that looked directly out upon a great black sheet—on which the returns were to be thrown from a stereopticon.

The returns were "mixed," and slow in coming in. This gave Kane time for hope—time, too, for planning what he would do if inevitable crash was not to be averted.

If the election went favorable, it would surprise no school point in his behavioral study. He was treated practically control the situation—he was, indeed, with this that an unlimited franchise for monopoly.

As the frames of liquor rose to his clear, steady brain, he reckoned the chances for and against a picture in which he figured as a fugitive, but with an assured income abroad, and a lovely bride to share his forced sojourn in some safe and remote foreign clime.

He and his friends adjourned from the table to the expressive by whose, as it was announced that the returns were tabulating—to wait, with Fortune and patiently.

Kane alone, an old, experienced political hack, mounted at the table, pencil and tab before him, ready to estimate on the basis of or gain from the moral "straw"—indication of a conflict or country.

All were fairly sharp—as they all knew—in reading the signs of fate.

But in half an hour each man of the group was silent, anxious.

Kane was unemotional.

It was inexplicable; preposterous! Precisely after predict, county after county, rolled in opposition, ready to estimate a majority.

"Kane, it looks bad!" observed a serious Tuxedo chagrin, coming up to him.

"Looks like the tide turns, we are beaten."

"Mr. Kane?"

The old professional had arisen from the table, anxiously, but not at all manly. His tab was in his hand.

"Do you want an estimate?" he inquired.

"I am beginning to form a decidedly adverse opinion, sir."

"I can give you almost exact figures."

"And the result?"

"The Stone will wring recoil in the opposition by over 5,000 majority."

A blasting curse left Perry Kane's grim lips, for he had confidence in the prediction.

He stepped out upon the balcony, to get a reviving breath of fresh air, to be alone, to mass up the chances as they rose fierce and sullen—

Slowly he listened up his coat, and stood off the land—his land—grabbed by the Bigger he had drank.

"Land is a clear land," he muttered. "I must get to the treasurer's vault. I must see her, arrange for the marriage, flight, at once, if this last hope is indeed falling me."

Again he paused at the bulletin—the snapshot representations the returns were flashing out, a cheering mob in the street below. Fever now set of figures confirmed the fact that Inskip and Inglehart maintained a telling deficit.

"Five to go!" already spoke a voice at his elbow.

"Yes—" short, jerkily.

"It's queer, though—all the work so old, so sure were we."

"There's been a mistake somewhere," the stunned Kane.

"Wrong—there's been slick, secret work in the dark—somebody has been in some manner hand at politics!" retorted the author.

In politics as in finance, there are the fair force of retribution overwhelms him.

Who had been undermining him—and why?

As he stood thinking this over, it occurred as if he could vaguely trace power and influence back to the doubt assert on the company and the company's politics

"Discard at no personality!" he muttered. "Pshaw! Why? and by whom? Only a turn in the tide—well, I've had my show—

And from the balcony a form had stolen, mischievously as had it glided through the crowded room.

It was the "disgraced" man—Gilson the boss.

He kept in the shadow, his eye fixed strangely upon one.

Then, abruptly, he struck a match on the balcony railing—it flashed, went out.

It was a signal to a man watching the balcony from the street below, who now in turn signaled to the person who was drawing the stereopticon.

Shortly, Perry Kane had not noticed the flash of the match, not even the interruption of the stereopticon—he noticed

His glance was turned for a final view of the ruin, he was in the spot and the hotel.

"There are no returns that not his eyes now, but a portrait—

The portrait of a man, of a face he recognized, was exposed to recognize, by the man tumultuously applauding the defeat, and—

"Are an operation swift it confronted Perry Kane—as if a reply to the query what the motive of the hidden hand" has that brought him to ruin—

"From the canvas it looked upon his guilty face.

"From the dead—that man—murdered Ezra Kane!" gasped Kane, "and he looks like one stricken by a thunderbolt.

At that moment, he was thinking, his face, his gaze.

He turned to flee, for just avenging Heaven seemed at his door at least.

At that moment, he was thinking, Frank his consultant rising Gilson, those, his hands encircling the criminal! Blood stood in his veins of steel!

CHAPTER XI.

An exposition, ringing as a beacon bell for all fellow-men, flashed on his startled fingers cast about the shrinking, cold-sweat forehead of the man who, in his blunded down.

The meaning of a mighty passion sway and his soul, merging every emotion into an absolutely concentrated, fierce, storm, swift, complete.

"The man who was his enemy!"—confession of the look of the years was at hand—a self-condemnation, a sudden, a sudden, a sudden, and at his mercy.

Before his eyes there seemed to flow a river of blood. In a twinkling scores the chief-secret of events pulsed the crystal pictures that grouped about the present tragic demonstrate a marvel-living the history of rare human interest.

For this man—his victim, loser—worker, sensitive, political master, brilliantly—Gilson Hope had abandoned his home, his position, happiness, peace.

He, Percy V. Kane, had robbed him of his brother and was about to steal from him, too, the woman he loved!

And now, while the turbulent mob of handshakers and excited sensation-seekers surged in the street below, while the fate of all his schemes and the disaster of permanent political obliteration, Kane lay in his chair a broken, wrecked, cowering thing.

"Time!"

Close to the marble-white face of the prostrate man he had dragged to the door of the balcony, Hope bent his hot, blazing eyes, with red in his back ran, at the formidable facts of guilt with which he had invested his downfall. And the crash shuddered, for he felt that soon, sudden and sure, succeeded his will—he felt it.

"Who are you?" he panted, struggling to his knees.

"Who—a grinding laugh—sardonic, full of bitter triumph—and the man—"Hyam! Hyam—remember the avenger! Go back the years—Chinaco, your rotten rock jolting vehicle, the man you swindled because he had proved your secrets and if another hand would have given the facts to the commercial world—my brother—my brother, Hyam!"

The name was pronounced in a sob, a Bellgnight at the moment those consciousness of the agitated instrument of mission in the Kane. Yet the Hyam revived of the sunny-faced brother, so dearly cut in death, wrung an sort of anguish.

"Your brother!" repeated Kane. "Proof for the transparency? It was you, then.

He striving limbs fall feel. He was were brown-stricken. Now to have "I am within the title turns, we are beaten."

"Mr. Kane?"

The old professional had arisen from

"Hide down!" he murmured, in a low and helpless tone.

"Yes," came the prompt, discordant response. "I swore it—I have achieved it. And you—you have acknowledged all the force of the deed on yonder canvas—Are! you remember it. It brought confession to your lips! And I can only drag you to hell! That does not give me back my brother—not, yield revenge, but you shall listen, you shall know what treasure resolve has done to and society of the worse for. I have sacrificed the cry of Jesus from from your lips—I have undermined your sweep ambition. Thus I have done it. Write, copy, save, but bought will avail you. Your hour has come."

He was in a frenzy as he spoke. He could have turn the wreck in his grasp to pieces. He felt all his usual order and steady methods fly to the winds, but he peaked little. Here was the climax he had striven for, this the final arrangement, and he proceeded with it.

"To your feet!" he shouted, suddenly Kane was brought upright like a child in the grasp of a Hercules.

"And then!" declared his prisoner, insolent with terror.

"Your vault!"

"Stop—wait!" hotly panted Kane. "You were never nothing absolutely. Let me explain, if mercy—"

"You have none!"

"I am aware it!"

"Hit!"

Scorn, disdain—cold and entire—showed in Hope's eyes. He dragged his companion toward the open window, intent on proclaiming his rightful character, to those who had been his friends, and then to the mob in the streets below.

"Wait a moment, I say," pleaded Kane, holding back.

"No!" thundered Hope.

"You want? You shall?"

"Insult—then defiance! You scum!" He had super Hope treated the man, but only to sweep him back with a swift blow from the open hand.

Both power and frenzy were in the movement, and the exclamation upon through the air, a plighting of engine, With a crash he strove the foul aerial sailing rendering the balcony. Hope, too, was possessed of the full power of his idea, and then appalled, saw the railing give, crash, and the man, Kane, sailing, shooting the darkness like a falling clod, Kane went speeding outward and this moment was without time to even utter a cry for help or of terror.

COMFORTS OF A SNOW HOUSE.

How to Build One and Live in Herein—How Yeski.

The experience of those who visit in the arctic during the colder winter months is to be summarized about as follows.

When the tent has been pitched the temperature within. It is some 15 or 20 degrees higher than outside, or 50 degrees below. It is 50 degrees in the open, one is damp and warm from the stress of the exercise of the day, but soon he comes cold and shivers; one crawls into his sleeping-bag and make entire in the diary clumsily with one's rolling on the floor from one's lady form to the floor from one's lady form to the floor on everything in the bag and cangeals in the sleeping-bag, so that it becomes stiff and heavy with the ice. Yet, in the tent, it is warm, freezes and soaking not when one gets into it at night and thaws it out; the in turn wets one's clothing, and the trousers and coat freeze stiff as soon as one comes out and breaks camp in the morning; the twenty-four hours are a round of a wickedness, and the constructed tent and lay sleeping-bags become a heavy load for the sled, writes Y. Stefansson in Harper's Magazine.

When one follows Eskimo methods the conditions are naturally different. We may freeze upon timber it be properly dry, the first month of winter, and are commonly drifted snow is easily found; the snow-knives of bone or iron, according to circumstances, are brought out and the surface of the drift is divided into blocks of desired shape, says fourteen by thirty inches and four inches thick; these are then carved on edge and laid to call a dome the size of the desired ground area of the domed-shaped hut; then, on the lines of architecture that apply to homes, whether made of snow or bone, the hollow house is completed. Now man can in an hour build a house large enough for eight to sleep in.

When the house is completed a doorway is cut in its side near the ground, same as spread over the top, one brushes himself a coat of snow as possible and crawls inside. The all things are then lit, and the house is soon brought to a temperature considerably above the freezing point; for man is one of the best-known non-conductors of heat, and the human cold of the outside penetrates the walls only to a very slight degree. But when the house has warm the inner side of the snow dome begins to thaw, and the water formed is soaked up into the snow, blotter fashion; when this water percolates far enough into the cave to meet the cold from the outside it freezes, and our snow house is turned into an ice house so strong that a polar bear can crawl over it without danger of breaking through.

When once inside the house the Eskimo strip naked to the waist and hang their clothes to dry so page in the sun. On some journeys we had short-iron stoves (procured from whalers in Herschel Island) and were installed in the snow houses, and in which we built roaring fires.

One is well placed to take comfort in the insecurity of such surroundings. We lounge in comfort, when sitting snug, warm and tightly clad, one lounge in the arctic blizzard whistling harmlessly over the ice vault that two hours before were an open snow bank. I hunted for a dressing gown and slippers, but one cannot fasten his sled with such an arrangement. There was no sled to make fast, no hand to writing the diary, no fear to congeal on the lid dulling and make them wet, none of the slight discomforts and the morning's footing lug that have been the stock in trade of the makers of arctic books. And when we broke camp in the morning we just had forgotten the sled, with an ice stiffened 100-pound load, not state the our fact the tent-cover smoke, our potential rest for the coming night.

The human body continue smooth lounge, yet is to be a hidden hand, would actually lift the cover when it

SOUL MUST BE NOURISHED.

By Rev. Guy Arthur Jameson.

How can the dog grow without water?—Job 8:11.

Life in its simplest forms is a mystery, an ever present miracle that has become commonplace and so lost its ultra-practical sense. If we stop to look beneath the surface of things we find more than we bargain, in letters or dollars and cents. Just even at the risk of becoming commonplace let us look for a moment the modest, fragile life of the dog.

If we could but understand the soul and why of its existence, we would have solved the problem of the life of nature, man and God. Life, whatever its external expression, is a part of the life-principle of the universe. We know that life has its origin in life. It is not an accident. It is not self-created. We call the source of the food, but that is not a sufficient explanation. It is just a confession that we cannot understand; it still remains the eternal mystery.

Life having been started, is not even self-sustaining. There is no form of life that is independent of all other life. The dog feeds only a little earlier, the dog feeds on the rabbit, and it comes into perfection. But the higher the forms of life, the more complex and the more dependent they become. When we reach man, made in the image of God, we find the highest and fullest expressions of life, we find him not only possessed of the full power of his physical, mental and spiritual most sensitive to the needs of his whole being. He is not only a man, but a vegetable, animal and spiritual kingdom—he is all of these and more, and as the dog comes nearer to its life he is nearer to man, and in which we will find the dog's life.

So it is possible for a man to give his time and energy and talent to the care of the dog and yet be a disgrace to the dwelling within. Man may screw into a perfect animal, and yet be defeated because he has carefully refined and yet carry in his bosom a starved, stretched soul. The dog can not grow without water; the mind will not develop without thought and meditation, and there can be no soul growth without food. Man does not develop in the highest sense until he comes into a consciousness of spiritual attainment—until he is a longsing and thirsting after the fruits of the spirit—gentleness, long suffering, goodness, faith.

God has made provision for man's every need, but he has made it imperative that he put forth effort if he would attain it. And the struggle to fill the longing soul with the food of God is inspiring mind and under the inspiration and soul is what we call life. The measure of its success, the degree of its fullness, will largely depend upon the consciousness of the individual's efforts.

SAVED FROM FEAR TO FAITH

By Henry E. Cope.

"Who by the power of God are guarded through faith unto a salvation ready to be revealed in the last time."—1 Peter, 1:5.

"If a man stops up to you on the street, takes you by the buttonhole, and inquires: 'Are you saved?' between surprise and indignation you hardly know what answer to give the. Yet, if it is true you are saved, and without some definite, marked experience called "Salvation," we are all in the position of the dog. The fact that the question is not asked more often, is a most significant fact, and raises the question has thrilling import. They live in a world of fear, for they are ignorant of God's love, and of the sovereignty in which the whole universe is governed. They are spiritually cruel, malignant, and malicious. They walk in trembling dread of devils that exist in their fancy, and are ever looking waiting to insult them.

If this world is a prison, and God is our gaoler, if the universe is our foe, we do indeed need to be saved, to be delivered from it. But it is strange that those who sing most loudly of the goodness of God should also insist so strongly on the diabolical character of this world the most consecrated orders.

It is not long since we were practically all in a language of fear. Even little children are made to dread lest the devil should die before morning and that whatever happened to the spirit of a man of an offended deity, while strong men carried around the terrorizing question, 'Am I safe if I should die?'

Some time ago I was talking with a man who was in the habit of taking his children with him to the meetings, and I asked him if they were not afraid to be in such a place. He said they were not, but I saw by the expression of his face that they were afraid of their father. I asked the question of a little girl of ten years, and she said, "Father is good to us when we are good." Fear of a father, fear of God, fear of the devil, fear of the world, fear of death, fear of the future, fear of the grave, fear of the judgment

How to Get Strong.

I F. J. Daly, of 1247 W. Congress St., Chicago, tells of a way to become strong: He says: "My mother, who is old and was very feeble, is derived so much benefit from Electric Bitters that I feel it's my duty to tell those who need a tonic and strengthening medicine about it. In my mother's case a marked gain in flesh has resulted, insomnia has been overcome, and she is steadily growing stronger." Electric Bitters quickly remedy stomach, liver and kidney complaints. The Magic of Odd Numbers.

"Even in the manner of weighing properties there seems a magic in odd numbers," said a housekeeper. "Most of the packages of tea, sugar, coffee and other commodities that prosper keep on hand to facilitate trade contain an odd number of pounds. If you are in a hurry and ask for a number of pounds of almost any kind of grocery tradesman can accommodate you with a one-pound, three-pound or a five-pound package, but the chances are that if you want two pounds or four pounds of anything it will have to be weighed to order."

OUR SCHOOLS.

Superintendent Woodley and His Teachers Begin Business Next Monday.

School opens in all departments Monday, Sept. 14th, and work is being rushed to put the buildings and grounds in the best possible shape before that time; many needed improvements and changes are being made. The grounds are being cleaned and beautified. A new flag pole is being raised on the grounds of each building. The tennis and other athletic goods are put in order for the fall athletic season. State black-boards and other conveniences are being placed in many of the rooms, and the school will start out as well equipped and prepared as any in Northern Michigan.
There will be but few changes in the faculty, there being but two in the high school and three in the grades. The following is a complete list of the teachers:
W. H. Woodley, who has been here the past week conducting the Charlevoix County Institute is superintendent; D. L. Moore, as principal of the high school, will have charge of the work in algebra; I. M. DeVoe has the physical sciences and geometry.
Miss Anna Lombard has been adding to her efficiency, by a course at a business college during the summer. Miss Grace I. Corley comes from Benton Harbor college where she was assistant in English and Oratory departments during the past year. She is recommended as an enthusiastic and a tactful teacher, and her training in oratory should be of material benefit to those who are interested in that line of work.
Miss Olive Caldwell is also from Benton Harbor college, where she was assistant in the Latin department. During the summer she has been working with Prof. J. H. Niz, who is at the head of the German department in the college. This training, with her experience, should make this department very popular with the high school.
The County Normal promises to have the largest attendance in its history. The teachers and school boards are beginning to realize the advantages which come from actual training under competent teachers.
Miss Jessie M. Hines will be principal of this department, and Miss Alice E. Reed is the Critic teacher. Miss Reed has spent the summer in Europe, and her observations and experiences in educational work abroad will add zest and value to her work with the prospective teachers in her department.
Miss Grace Gregory, who has charge of the music and drawing, comes very highly recommended, and rumor has it that she is a violinist of no small ability. This should be of considerable interest to those who desire a high school orchestra.
Miss Ollie Weatherwax is again principal of the grade departments and with Miss Mildred Lane and Miss Crilley will have charge of the 5th and 6th grades. Miss Lane comes from Mt. Pleasant with high recommendations and has been taking special observation work in her department during the summer. Miss Crilley is also a graduate of Mt. Pleasant, and three years ago was hired to teach in Charlevoix, but was compelled to resign on account of sickness. Her experience since should add materially to her efficiency.
Miss Helen Perfield and Miss Pearl Lewis have charge of the 3rd and 4th grade work. Miss Flossie Crowell has the 2nd and 4th grades.
Miss Hermione Sherman, a graduate from Mt. Pleasant, has the 1st grade. Miss Sherman was one of the most promising members of the primary department in last year's class and will do good work.
Miss Sophia Manson and Miss Genevieve Jarvis, who have been at the State Normal College during the summer will have charge of the North Ward building and Miss Mary Tysver and Miss Elizabeth McClanathan will again have charge of the South Ward.
There will be but two important changes in the policies or courses of the school system for the coming year worthy of note. One is in the Mathematics department of the high school. It is this work, and especially algebra, which is found the most difficult for those going to college. It has been decided, instead of offering algebra in the 9th and 10th grades as heretofore, to offer it in the 9th and 12th, giving the students the benefit of the training in geometry before finishing algebra.
Also, no student in the high school will be permitted to carry more than four subjects if his average standing for the previous year has not been 85 per cent or higher, except by permission from the school board upon recommendation by the superintendent. These changes should add materially to efficiency of high school.

FOR THE USERS OF TOBACCO,

Assertion That Plant Was Certainly Placed Here for Good Purpose.

It is meeting strange that, with all the experience at command, the physiologists are prone in agreement as to the effects of the smoking habit. Even where my opinion has been fairly well established by the apparently well-digested views of the scientists with respect to certain phases of the whole problem, they are wholly liable to upsetting by the latest opinion. For example, two considerations have long been thought to be determined—that moderate indulgence in tobacco need not be denied, and that the bad end of life teems would better adjure tobacco altogether. It may be soberly that man is not a smoker by nature; and certain effects of tobacco seem to indicate, without especial argument, that the longer the acquirement of the habit is postponed the better for the human system. At the same time the remote antiquity of the tobacco plant suggests that it is one of nature's unassisted growths; and, if it were not designed for man to enjoy in security, neither is it at all clear that it is to be chased with nature's productions.—Providence Journal.

SOME people have an idea that a paint that's right for indoor work is not so good for outside painting; and vice versa.
Lead and Zinc Paint is right for any sort of painting; it covers more surface per gallon and does it better than ordinary paint.
Hand mixed paint doesn't begin to do the work so well, no matter how good the painter.
For all painting, use and insist on having Devoe Lead and Zinc Paint.

The modern child is an immense advance in appearance on her mother and grandmother. It is the exception to see a child strikingly plain between the ages of two years and ten, and the majority of carefully nurtured children are nowadays wonderfully well developed.—The Bystander.

—We have been waiting for the opposition to "cough up" its decree in money affairs before opening up the fight. Now the ball opens. We shall expect to hear all manner of nonsense about "machine," "ring," "rotten boroughs," "branch," etc. But this fact remains: There was never in the history of Charlevoix county a convention that so fully and completely represented the will of the people, as that which nominated the Republican county ticket last week. Every nominee on that ticket represents the popular will, and it will be elected.

—Mr. Dodd, the nominee for congress from this district, in a letter to The Traverse City Record, says: "I am naturally gratified at the result of the vote at the primaries in the Eleventh congressional district. As any nomination assures my election as representative in congress from this district, I shall make it my duty to acquaint myself with the needs of all sections of the district. One part of the district will be to me as much in congress as important as any other part and I shall strive to ascertain the wishes of the people of the district regardless of locality and exert my very best endeavors to serve the district as it should be served."

—Lieut. Hallinger, inspector of the U. S. Life Saving service in this district, returned from Beaver Island yesterday. A full station was ordered for that island two years ago, and would have now been in operation but for a defect in the title of the site selected, at "the point" near the present volunteer station. Lieut. Hallinger's trip this time was to investigate the situation, and he returned with the opinion that the title defect could be rectified and the station established as originally planned. To this end he will send his energies before he leaves the district to take command of a revenue cutter on the Atlantic coast after Jan 1st.

—There is no doubt but the drama is the relationship of human beings, a drama to succeed must contain that subtle "something" in us that we feel and talk so much of, yet know so little. Over fifty years ago a little book came from the press. A woman named Mary J. Holmes was the writer —"Lena Rivers" was the name the book bore. Its success was phenomenal and has continued ever since. Critics of the time gave columns of space to the glorifying of a woman who could place so beautiful a drama in book form. The popularity of the book was phenomenal. Its sales were stupendous and since that time, over one million readers have enjoyed its pages. Now comes the announcement that a dramatization has been made of "Lena Rivers," and a play embodying all the characters, incidents and scenes contained in the book, has been staged. Beulah Poynter made a dramatization and in play form "Lena Rivers" was proved so popular and successful as the book. The play has lived and given promise of successful popularity for years to come. At the Charlevoix Theatre, Friday evening, September 25th.

THE A. BOOTH CO.

The Big Fish Corporation Thrown Into the Hands of a Receiver.

The business world was shocked last Thursday to learn that the A. Booth Co. corporation, one of the most important trusts in the country, had been placed in process of liquidation in the hands of a receiver.
The news came with particular force to Charlevoix, as one of the most important districts in the Booth field of operations is that of which Charlevoix is headquarters, and Chas. Nordrum is manager.
In an interview with Mr. Nordrum yesterday, that official threw light on the situation that clears the atmosphere locally, and affords much encouragement. Temporary payments of accounts incurred previous to September 11th were suspended, but this embraced amounts of $100 or over, and an order of the Illinois court has extended time to cover all accounts. An order of the Michigan court is expected to follow this in a few days, and there will be no loss to creditors.
Mr. Nordrum's advices are to the effect that the situation is merely one that calls for a process of reorganization, and that business will be continued along lines previously followed. Fishermen are assured that A. Booth Co. will continue to handle their product, and that they need have no fear of the future.

Death of Mrs. L. D. Kanaga.

Mrs. Loretta Dunbar Kanaga died at her Charlevoix home on Sunday last, of cancer.
While it was known that she was seriously ill, her death at this time was entirely unexpected. She had come down from her farm near Ironton, where she spent her summers, to attend the wedding of her eldest son, Elmer, which took place Saturday, but remained at her home on the south terrace, unable to make the effort.
Mrs. Kanaga was a pioneer, and in the nearly four decades she had lived in this region, few women have performed a more conspicuous or more useful part in the progress of affairs. Mrs. Kanaga was a most accomplished woman. While her mind grasped and retained much in literature and history, she was especially wedded to music, in which art she was thoroughly educated, and which for many years she made her special study.
Mrs. Kanaga was born in Ashtabula county, Ohio, in 1846. She was married to Wm. Kanaga in 1866, and came with her husband to Atwood, where they resided for several years. As a young woman she graduated in music from the Oberlin, (Ohio) Conservatory of Music, and probably, no person ever came into this region with a more generous and thorough training in music than Mrs. Kanaga.
She cherished all her talent and motherly interest and affection to the education of her two sons—Elmer and Elon, and the results of her work constituted an imperishable monument to her memory.
The funeral was from the house on Tuesday afternoon, and interment was at Brookside cemetery.

The Democrat County Convention.

Representative—F. E. Bossinger, East Jordan.
Sheriff—Elmer Hayner, Wilson.
Clerk—J. A. Auld, Charlevoix.
Register—B. J. Quick, Boyne City.
Prosecutor—R. W. Kane, Charlevoix.
Judge of Probate—E. H. Sheppard, Boyne City.
Treasurer—O. H. Marsh, Boyne City.
Court Com.—R. E. Martin, Boyne City.
Coroners—Richard Williams, Dr. Roice.

A Surer-enough Knocker.

J. C. Goodwin, of Kelsville, N. C., says: "Bucklen's Arnica Salve is a sure-enough knocker for ulcers. A bad one came on my leg last summer, but that wonderful salve knocked it out in a few rounds. Not even a scar remained." Guaranteed for piles, burns, etc. 25c at F. G. Hines & Co's drug store.

A Happy Hymenial Event.

At the M. E. church last Saturday morning, Rev. Dr. Wright united in holy wedlock Dr. Elon Kanaga and Miss Lottie West, both raised under a Charlevoix "vine and fig tree," and both an honor to the mothers who bore them and the community in which they were raised.
The groom's best man was his brother, Dr. Elon Kanaga, a professor of dentistry in the University of Pennsylvania. The bride was attended by her friend Miss Caro Chamberlain, of Detroit.
The church was profusely decorated with flowers and potted plants, and the body of the church was half filled with invited guests.
The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Hattie West, of the north side, and is one of the most accomplished young women that ever donned a bridal veil. For some years she has been a teacher of domestic science in an eastern college.
Dr. Peter Kanaga is a graduate of the Charlevoix High School; the Poste School of Orthopedics, of Boston; the Naas Manual Training School, of Gothenburg, Sweden, and of the Michigan University Medical Department of the class of 1903.
Dr. and Mrs. Kanaga go to Moscow, Idaho, where he has been elected a professor of Sanitation and Hygeine in the State University.
They leave Charlevoix with the cordial good wishes of the entire community.

The Gauge of Battle.

Now that the democrats have placed their county ticket in the field, the fight may be said to be fairly on. We have no comments to make on the aforesaid democratic ticket.
The republicans have nominated a ticket that is above criticism, and they have no apology to make for any part of it.
It is composed of the people's will. No county convention has ever been held that more fully represented the people.
Every township was full represented and the utmost harmony characterized every act.
We expect to hear all sorts of howls from those who deceive the people and all manner of subterfuges will be used. But we believe that they will all be vain.

Missionary Society.

The Women's Missionary Society of the Congregational church will meet with Mrs. Henry Monroe Sept. 18th, at 2:30 p.m. Response to roll call with title or line of some favorite hymn. After the business session the following program will be rendered, with Mrs. Munroe and Mrs. Glassford in charge:
Song—Home Missions.
Reading of Scripture—Prayer.
Solo—Selected—Mrs. A. L. Coulter.
Reading—Home Missions—Mrs. Bryant.
Song—Women's Workman's Methodist.
Reading—"Voice of the City Heathen"—Mrs. Minford.
Piano Solo—Hymn—Mrs. Hall.
Piano Solo—Hymn—Miss Chaffee.
Reading—Lena Frazier.

—The figures of the attendance and receipts for the five seasons that "Quincy Adams Sawyer" has been upon the stage prove that nearly three million people have witnessed this great drama of New England rural life at that time. In view of this fact, and because of the constantly growing prosperity of this attraction, it can be said with truth that this is a play in a thousand." For there have been no new similar attractions in the history of the American stage that they can be received readily by all theatrical men of experience. "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is unique. Its rivals in attributes are found in the entire freedom from stage conventions. There is no erring girl, no mortgage on the farm, no mourning wedding and no villain. Yet strength is by no means sacrificed by the abandonment of familiar stage conventions. Its places are substituted characters that are real, motives that are natural and a development of interest that holds because it appeals by its strong humanity. When the famous rural drama is presented at the opera house on Tuesday, November 3, 1908, it will be found to be presented by an admirable company, every member of which has been rehearsed with special regard for his or her fitness for the role played. The scenic embellishments of the drama is in perfect accord with its spirit, and the entire entertainment is natural and sympathetic.

A Political Vendetta

Hope sprang to the gap, hands outstretched, to stay his speeding foe, but Lane had succeeded. Tearing past the edge of the broken railway fence, he saw Kane go for dear life down the tracks and through a window area, arched with a stone mullion.

The fall was a full twenty feet.

"Has he escaped?" cried Hope. The thought aroused him to quick self action. He swung back in the window, upsetting an astonishing policeman, whose attention had been attracted by the noise of the scuffle—in the precipitancy of his rush.

Through the room down a staircase and out to the street Hope hurried. He reached the spot where he had seen Kane disappear. He stared down the dark aperture, then called:

"Van—Kane!"

No response. He knelt and faced a border. In vain showed a shallow flat, faced only by the barred outer window.

"Gone!"

Electrified, baffled, Hope sprang to his feet and glared around the spot, peering the distance with nearly the keen glance of a tiger thrown from the trail.

It was impossible—he was certain—Kane had escaped a little fall, and had instantly recovered his wits and had climbed out of the window area and escaped.

Whither?

Hope was twenty feet in one direction, then in another, passed—greeted, savaged. His inquiries were like air—he was on fire with energy and fury. Abruptly he focused the curiosity-guidance that distracted his usually keen wits to a reasonable but rapid estimate of the situation.

He had alarmed—had warned—his enemy. Kane's one thought now would be of flight, of hiding. He was baffled, disorganized, disarmed. Hope's lip curled down to pulp would be friends no longer. Hope could think out a new plan, force Kane, Fate, money—then, distance. Would he baffle—outwit—Hope? Oh, never, never!

Kane gained the round in the street without ceremony. He reached a more quiet side thoroughfare. An empty cab came dashing around the corner, its driver fresh for his night's work, the steed refreshed mettled and ready for speed.

In a minute Hope was inside brief, secret orders given to the cab driver. The vehicle became a thing of flight.

CHAPTER XII.

Inside of an hour Hope made three call—all disappointing ones. To the elegant apartments occupied in the past by the aristocratic Kane he went, to the chief of police, to a club where both sometimes met in the past, alone.

He got trace of the company president. He was with some friends, drinking free for and dejection in strong drink. With him Hope had neither to do, so he continued his search, but he gained no encouragement of the man he sought.

He knew the assistant of the law well, from past political experience, and he had a hundred—aye, a thousand—ready aides whom he could rely on, from assistants in the political haints he had fought so hard to win, but which now seemed as a hundred—a mere handful.

The first reckless fever of triumph and rare had thinned, leaving in its place thought of immediate public denouncement of his enemy. A slow, refined method of meting out his vengeance appealed to him, and so somberly and personally scathing the fugitive spoils, so relentlessly and unmercifully pursuing detailed confusion and positive, conclusive exposure at last.

"I must find him—I, alone—before the police—before—before—he—he—he must be hidden! What will his course be? Free—the fight is lost! I need with unprecipitancy, but the inspiration was strong. Patience, Hope—my murdered brother! I—I will—I will—in three days be all these years. Yet all scarcely is this time! Van Kane, I—I will find you—come!"

The previous time had already gone by and Kane had not been found. Every minute in hiding increased the chance of his perfect his chance for security for the flight. Panic—fear—possible—probable.

"The mills!" he said, swiftly, and the driver, accustomed to such orders, heard in a new direction.

The works were not in operation. Here all was quiet—deserted—a place of blight and inaction, but only to a degree evidencing the necessity of keeping up important steam and blast conditions in readiness for the morrow. The shelter had caused a general exodus of labor, and in Hope reversed the mills at a fabulous rate of speed, the grim, black outlines of smoke and blast furnace were dominant suggestive of the ruin brooding over the deserted enterprise.

He body distilled in the savaging vehicle and his eye in it, as clearly scanning every part of the structure where the general idiots would be, he made out a certain spot of light.

It was in the single room built diminutive for better building, and it caused that section of the same given over to the private headquarters of the executive.

A quick thought, a keen hope, inspired the driver. He was quite assured that Kane should come inthere. Some spoils there were yet on hand to come, some incriminating documents, doubtlessly, to destroy before the flight of the night craft, and signaling a stop in an avenue formed by towering lines of the mills, Hope leaped to the ground.

"All right, sir."

Hope sped forward. He was yet a little ways from the rails proper, but he addressed "I have no scruples in the matter. There was a laterally of criss-cross lanes and roads to reach the railway, and he emerged into the main sidetrack path, that cut the factory expanse due south and north, very nearly run under the feet of two powerful locomotives drawn up on carrier.

He darted back in time to save himself, though the vehicle guards quite grazed his body. Instinct—he was not a single moment of the carriage—a man.

"Hot Kane" he called out rapidly, "but someone on a mission of urgency. Sent by—Yes—"

Strong in this conviction, Hope hastened forward. He saw man lifting the side door of the cabin in view. The engines was no longer in sight. It had probably cut around to the main front entrance. His steps went also thither. Hope neared abruptly.

A workman might challenge him, the doors might be colocked to arrest this flee, attempt to exclude others—hence, so thoroughfare. Again, it was an intermediate, and in the dark an unfamiliar disposition—a sudden—a—a—a

William H. Taft's Speech of Acceptance Gives Party Record in Behalf of Labor.

(William H. Taft in his speech of acceptance.)

We come now to the question of labor. One important plank of the policies of the present administration has been an anxiety to secure for the wage earner an equality of opportunity and such positive statutory protection as shall place him on a level in dealing with his employer.

The Republican party has passed an employers' liability act for interstate railroads, and has established an eight hour law for government employes and on government contracts. The success of the reform effected by the former is the shorting of the following year rule and the introduction of the compensation negligence theory by which an employe injured in the service of his employer does not lose all his right to recover because of slight negligence on his part.

Then there is the act providing for compensation for injury to government employes, together with the various statutes requiring safety appliances upon interstate commerce railroads for the protection of their employes and limiting the hours of their employment.

These are all instances of the desire of the Republican party to do justice to the wage-earners.

Doubtless a more comprehensive measure for compensation of government employes will be adopted in the future; the principle in such cases has been recognized and in the necessarily somewhat slow course of legislation will be more fully embodied in definite statutes.

The interests of the employer and the employe never differ except when it comes to a division of the joint profit of labor and capital into dividends and wages. This must be a constant source of prejudiced discussion between the employer and the employe, as indeed are the other terms of the equation.

To give to employes their proper position in such a controversy, to enable them to maintain themselves against employers having great capital, they may well unite, because in union there is strength, and without it, each individual laborer and employer would be helpless. The promotion of the industrial peace through the instrumentality of the trade agreement is often one of the results of such union when intelligently conducted.

There is a large body of laborers, however, skilled and unskilled, who are not organized for unions. Their rights before the law are exactly the same as those of the union men, and are to be protected with the same care and watchfulness.

In order to induce their employers into a compliance with their request for changed terms of employment, workmen have the right to strike in a body.

They have a right to use such persuasion as they may, provided it does not reach the point of duress, to lead their relatives and friends to join them in their union against their employer, and they have a right, if they choose, to accumulate funds to support those engaged in a strike, to delegate to officers the power to direct the action of the union, and to withdraw themselves and their associates from dealings with or giving custom to those with whom they are in controversy.

THE ISSUE AND PARTY RECORD.

Will the People Trust Experimentalists and Theorists?

(From Sherman's Speech of Acceptance.)

The overshadowing issue of the campaign equally in importance with that confronted Jefferson and Jackson, is shall the administration of President Roosevelt be approved, shall a party of demonstrated capacity in administrative affairs be continued in power, shall the reins of government be placed in experienced hands, or do the people prefer to trust their destinies to an aggregation of experimental malcontents and visionaries, whose only claim to a history is a party name they pilfered?

With a record of four decades of wise legislation; two score years of faithful administration; offering for fulfilled pledges as a guaranty of his promises for the future, the Republican party appeals to the people and, with full confidence in their wisdom and patriotism, awaits the rendition of the November verdict.

DENIES THAT BRYAN "COULD DO NO HARM."

Congressman Burke Says Office of President is Infinitely More Powerful Than Congress.

Congressman James Francis Burke, of Pittsburg, in an address on "The Powers of the President," says:

"The American people can make no greater mistake than to elect Mr. Bryan on the supposition that he can do no harm in the face of an adverse Senate. As between the executive and legislative departments of the government, the former has infinitely greater power to rule and ruin than the latter.

"Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan are wholly different types of men. Each possesses a strong individual character, which would certainly assert itself in the White House. What either of these men would do during a four years' term in the White House is equally as much entirely among thoughtful Americans as the mere matter of election alone.

"As a director of moneys the President is without a rival in his days. Through the agencies under his control he will this year disburse a billion dollars, almost as the great things we are doing in adding to the unparalleled of the world's achievements.

"In view of the fact that during the fifteen years of Bryan leadership the States controlled by his party have decreased from 25 to 12, the number of Senators from 46 to 32, the number of Representatives in Congress from 229 to 151, and to that time the Democratic party was in control of the ground, whereas it is now, as a consequence of his leadership, so broken and heterogeneous mass of Populistic elements, the American people can see their prospects of a conservative policy if Mr. Bryan should succeed."

LABOR WORLD FOR TAFT.

Characterizes Him as True Friend of the Workingmen.

(From the Concord (N. H.) Monitor.)

The Labor World comes out strongly in its advocacy of Mr. Taft. It characterizes him a true friend of labor and declares that the affirmative acts of Mr. Bryan's life have been the holding of some of the most conservative and most selfish of all the Democratic leaders, who are allowing him the labor vote. It says: "That Secretary Taft is a true friend of labor is certain, and all the more, unpopular, because he knows what Democratic Congresses or any one else may make on him cannot prevent him from contributing to be the friend of the wage worker. Organized labor cannot afford to have itself split up into factions on this political issue. Trust President Gompers is wrong in forcing this issue on issue fight as certain, and intelligent wage workers will certainly come to this conclusion."

Campaign Funds.

"We wonder if Mr. Taft is "in the adjusted ground," said Mr. Bryan in one of his numerous interviews since the Denver convention. The ground referred to is Mr. Taft's statement that no campaign contributions would be received from corporations. Mr. Bryan intended to convey the impression that Mr. Taft had come to that determination after the Denver convention. In this the Democratic "sportsman" is not honest, or Mr. Taft is a law abiding citizen. Such contributions are unlawful, made so by a law passed by a Republican congress at the instance of a Republican administration of which Judge Taft was a part six months before the Denver convention. Be honest, Mr. Bryan, if you can."

Bryan's Precinct Republican.

At the recent plenary election in Nebraska, Lancaster Precinct No. 1 in which is located Pattrick, the voting precinct of W. J. Bryan, cast thirty-five Republican votes and twenty-six Democratic. The same precinct last fall cast forty-three Republican votes and thirty-six Democratic, a Democratic loss of seventy more than 1 per cent. When Dr. Bryan's home was first entered in President A of the Fifth Ward, a polling place which subsequently had to be moved to vote about the proportion of three Republicans to one Democrat. At the time the township of Fairview he remarked jocularly that he was going to a community where the goodness division was more even, and he hoped in time so to reform Lancaster No. 1 as to make it vier around to his way of thinking.

George Davis as Manager.

The statement of President Farrell of the New York Americans that Kid Elberfeld's appointment as manager of the Yanks is a permanent one is not taken seriously by followers of baseball. Those who are on the inside and generally know what they are talking about are predicting that George Davis, the veteran shortstop of the Chicago White Sox, will be the man who will lead the Yankees in 1909.

Davis, who at one time was the star of the Chicago team, is a great favorite with Gotham fans, and his appointment would no doubt be hailed with glee from the thousands of fans in the metropolis. While with the Giants he secured some valuable managerial experience, and his aggressive spirit being somewhat blunted to the nature of Manager Jimmy McGraw, the acting leader of the New York Americans, his appointment would no doubt be a popular move on the part of Farrell.

Cy Young's Good Advice.

Says Cy Young of the Boston Americans: "I don't think there is anything wonderful at all about a man being able to play ball at my age. My batting is a slow action like the bodies of some of other players, but I get out in the air and keep in shape for the game. The secret of long life on the diamond lasts from good habits, which are necessary if one is necessary without exercise to go to get outdoors and exercise in the winter. Rain or snow, rain, do anything that comes you way, but do something. Then when spring comes you'd have something to work on, muscle hose and muscle to back it up. Well, I know of so many men retiring from the game at about 35 years of age, who have to do a little secretly in the winter they begin but for years and years in rough weather, muscle wasting season on the diamond it is next to fatal to settle back into a life of sedentary inactivity from October to March."

McCormick, New York's New Player.

Baseball's amateurs are well familiar with the case of Harry McCormick, who was purchased from Philadelphia by Mathews, Recently Philadelphia asked for waivers on McCormick, intending to place him with some minor league club, but New York claimed him. He is the McCormick who figured in the three cornered trade by which New York got Doyle, Chief Bender had had Doolin and couldn't manage him. Plushing had Seering and had Bender and couldn't handle discipline. New York had McCormick, recently acquired from Jersey City and suffering from a bad case of Gravesitis, began pulling wires, with the result that Pittsburg got McCormick, Chesbrough secured Schlitzer and Mathews got rid of a man who, like Cormick, sack at a cost of $15,000. Doolin couldn't be purchased for ten or even twenty times that sum. Selecting is an outlook.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

The Care of Turkeys.

November should find the turkeys well fattened with the bulk of the season's output on the Thanksgiving market. Use precaution in feeding the market turkeys and do not allow the breeding turkeys to feed with the fattling, as fat breeders assure you of a poor crop the following season.

We cannot refrain from repeating the caution of overfeeding. Thousands of breeding turkeys are everlastingly ruined every year by allowing them to feed with the market turkeys. Every year we go over our flock and select out our breeders. Next time to them—we retain until the heavy feeding is over, when they are again given their freedom to approach the late fall season in the very pink of condition, transmitting health, vigor and beauty to their progeny, assuring us of a profitable crop or early-hatched turkeys.—Connecticut Farmer.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Custodian of G. O. P. Campaign Fund.

Charles H. Sheldon of New York is the new treasurer of the Republican national committee, has been active in politics for many years. He was a member of the Republican national committee in 1904 and 1904, treasurer of the New York county Republican committee from 1900 to 1902 and treasurer of the New York State committee in 1903.

Mr. Sheldon's standing in financial circles gives him peculiar advantages for the position of custodian of funds. He is a director of the Bethlehem Steel corporation, the Detroit Edison company, the Metropolitan Trust company, the Milwaukee Light, Heat and Traction company, the Milwaukee Electric Railway and Light company, the New Jersey Terminal Dock and Improvement company, the Republic Iron and Steel company, the Rogers Locomotive works, the Trust Company of America, the Union Bay and Paper company, the Union Electric Light, Heat and Power company of St. Louis, the United Railways Company of St. Louis and other companies.

Mr. Sheldon is president of the Union League club of New York and is fifty-one years old.

Congressional Campaign Manager.

On James T. Lloyd of Missouri, chairman of the Democratic congressional campaign committee, devolves the task of directing the fight for control of the national house of representatives. This is Mr. Lloyd's first venture as a national campaign manager, a position, however, for which he is well equipped by a long and successful political career. Elected to the fifty-fifth congress to fill a vacancy, he has since been regularly returned to represent the First Missouri district.

For the greater part of his congressional service he has acted as minority whip on the floor of the house. As Democratic whip Mr. Lloyd has been successful in getting his Democratic colleagues to vote as a solid

Chairman Lloyd is a native of Missouri and is a lawyer by avocation and choice. After being admitted to the bar he removed to Shelbyville, where he has since resided and practiced his profession, frequent in going to congress he had held no office except that of prosecuting attorney of his county.

Rockefeller's Little Joke.

John D. Rockefeller has one trick which even his genial critics want deep blue. He doesn't affect public dinners. The secret of this abstinence is recently confided to his family physician.

"In the first place," he said, "I can't eat much, as you know.

"But you don't have to eat at such feasts," protested the doctor.

"I'm aware of that," replied J. D., "but you do have to sit through the speeches, and if there's anything I detest it's that part of thing. To my mind an after dinner speech is like a bicycle wheel: the longer the spoke the greater the tire."

Art Fakes.

Sir Caspar Purdon Clarke, curator of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, said at a dinner apropos of forged antiquities:

"It isn't strange. I have seen myself, in Italy, men old hands—painting men—whose dates showed that they were issued before the invention of printing."

THE MINUET.

"What do you think, girls—that old maid, Hepsibah Herbert, is going to dance at our Mrs Boston? Did you ever hear of anything more ridiculous?" And Dorothy Palmer tossed her head disdainfully at the thought of what its her seemed an unwarrantable proceeding.

"Oh, do tell us all about it, Dolly, dear! Come, tell us all you know."

"Why! that will not take her very long," chimed in one of the sweet girls, who did not regard Dorothy in a very favorable light. "It mean, of course, dear, it will not take you long to tell the story, for all is well known you have a wonderful faculty of condensing a vast amount of information to a few most refreshingly pungent remarks."

"If you girls will only be quiet," replied Dorothy, "I will tell you the little I know. Today I went to Miss Villiers' dancing class to practice the Minuet one, and was should walk by her Hepsey. Miss Villiers had one of her Wordsland lectures and was about to dismiss the class when what did that antiquated maiden do but step forward and volunteer to put the young folks through their paces.

"Well, in justice to our village spinster, she knows a thing or two about Minuet, and Villiers became so interested that she forgot her lecture and said some profane in her compliments. 'My dear Miss Hepsey' she said, 'I thought by-self capable of teaching these children, but here are you capable of teaching us. Will you not confirm the pupils too?' Will you not introduce them into dance? It will be such an innovation?

"'I have not danced for years,' answered Hepsey, and, would you believe it, girls, there were tears in the poor old creature's eyes. 'But, she added, 'I will comply with your request. Let me have a dozen of these pupils and I will put them through the evolutions in a minuet.' We volunteers to act fashionet clothes suitable for an old fashioned dance. I myself can wear a dress in which I last danced the last set, almost forty years ago.'

"The little creature warmed over the affair, and I am afraid your Miss Hepsey was rather ridiculed without since that Hepsey went about her preparations for the dance with methodical precision. The dance, few who were to be in her set met nightly at her little cottage and to the melody of Moore's "Dear Anna," expounded out of a whinny toned piano, went through the mazes and figures of the stately measure in a thoroughly satisfactory manner.

At last the night of the dance arrived. The town hall was peopled to the fullest capacity, for nearly every family in front and adjacent villages had a representative in our or number of the varlous dances. Many were those who remembered Miss Hepsey when she was a much younger woman. The gossips chattered among themselves and behind their memories, recalling events in her early life. Some of them hinted at the cause of her state of single blessedness, if such it could be called, and every one was curious to see her dance.

Miss Hepsey was late in appearing, and her entrance was the cause of no little excitement and some admiration. She wore an old rose silk petticoat, without an elaborately figured silk overdress, and a lace kerchief was folded over her breast, and on her feet were high heeled white slippers some what yellowed with age. To crown all, her scant hair was arranged over a cushion. That hair needed no powder. It was already as white as newly fallen snow.

Miss Villiers herself came forward to greet Miss Hepsey.

"Oh, my dear!" she said. "Whatever shall we do? Your partner has not come. I am afraid you will be very much annoyed, but the law on ties to find a substitute for him. Mr. Brooks, a new arrival in the village, has sacrificed his services. Do you mind?"

If any one had closely observed Hepsey at that moment it would have been noticed that a flush of color had crept into her pinkish yellow face.

"At such a time as this one cannot dance," she said. "There is no other alternative. Mr. Brooks is very kind. I have no doubt that I will find him a most acceptable partner."

A moment later she found herself courtesying to a stately and gentlemanly who was attired in small clothes, appropriate to the costume of his partner. There was no time for any further exchange of formalities, for just then the orchestra began playing the Minuet air, and the dance began. Dear Miss Hepsey was the cynosure of the eyes of the old school. The audience applauded her every movement, and at the conclusion of the minuet it had to be repeated. Those who came to scoff remained to admire, and Hepsey, for reasons best known to herself, was repeatedly happy.

It was not long after that when she left her little cottage and went to be a citizeness at the Grange, the first conference to the dance. Then the truth was revealed. Mr. Brooks was none other than the sweetheart of Hepsey's youth. The two had quarrelled after having danced a minuet, and he had gone away. After forty years, the vet difficult, he returned to the woman and was to be married in the church of the unpleasantness of the past was forgotten, and a reconciliation had taken place.

And Miss Villiers, having learned the secret of the early loves of Hepsey, was the good fairy who was the instrument of the reunion, and in the years that followed she was the attendant Friend of Mrs. Hepsibah Brooks and husband.—Boston Post.

Don't Neglect It

It is a serious mistake to neglect a weak heart. It is such a short step to chronic heart disease. When you notice irregularity of action, occasional shortness of breath, palpitation, fluttering, pain in chest or difficulty in lying on left side, your heart needs help—a strengthening tonic. There is no better remedy than Dr. Miles' Heart Cure. Its strengthening influence is felt almost at once.

"I have used 10 bottles of Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and can truthfully say it has done me more good than everything I have ever used, and I have tried nearly everything that I know of. The first bottle I took I felt as if I had taken what I was looking and said also Dr. Miles' Heart Cure, he said it was all right, so I took it and I felt as if I had an extra pair of lungs, so to speak, and while there is occasionally a slight attack of the old trouble, it is not enough for me to continue the medicine, I know what to do. I have taken 3 bottles altogether, the first, Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and 2 bottles of Dr. Miles' Nervine, practically cured me of my trouble."

Dr. Miles' Heart Cure is sold by your druggist, who will guarantee that the first bottle will benefit. If it fails he will refund your money.

DEFRAUD MAIL ORDER HOUSES

Virginians Plead Guilty to Clever Swindle Hitting Chicagoans.

David McDonald, postmaster at Golden Springs, Va., and Elijah Sharp, his assistant, have been placed under arrest by postoffice inspectors and pleaded guilty to using the mails for purposes of fraud. It is said that the men have been operating a swindling scheme against mail order houses in Chicago and elsewhere. It is said that when the articles ordered, including watches and jewelry, arrived in Chicago substitutes would be mailed back to the house with a letter claiming that the original had not been what was ordered. A paste diamond ring substituted for a real one is said to have been delivered. Both men pleaded guilty before a United States commissioner and have been released on $2,000 bail bonds for their appearance before the federal court of this United States Court. They not only secured bids from various authorities, but, in the majority of instances succeeded in having their money for the original purchase returned.

The Teachers' Institute.

East Jordan, Mich., Sept. 5, 1908.

Editor Sentinel:

I did be glad to have you use the following report if you can find room for it:

The annual Teachers' Institute which was held in Charlevoix, Aug. 31 to Sept. 4th was one of the most successful meetings of the kind that has ever been held in the county.

Sixty seven teachers were enrolled during the week and most of them were in attendance during very nearly all of the sessions.

Supt. Woodley had charge of the institute and was assisted in the work by Miss Hines and the commissioner.

Each day was divided into seven class periods and the teachers were invited to attend five of the seven classes. It was found, however, that most of the teachers were in all of the classes and a good deal of the work was done in the assembly room of the high school building, the class room being too small to accommodate the class.

The interest shown by the teachers speaks very highly of the character of the work done in the meeting. Supt. Woodley had charge of the classes in Pedagogy and School Management, History, Civics and Physiology.

His work along these lines was very strong and one of the most pleasing features of the classes was the questioning of the teachers in the class, showing clearly that the teachers are measuring up to the fact that it is necessary for them to be awake and resourceful if they wish to succeed in the work.

There is very little danger of failure on the part of the teacher who really tries to find out any thing about her work and who is interested to such an extent that she is willing to enter into class discussions concerning plans for the work. In other words, the teacher who will take the time and make an effort to fit herself for the work seldom fails to be able to get around most of the difficulties of the school room, and if she cannot get around all of them, she will be able to meet in a successful manner, those that she cannot get around.

Mr. Woodley's work along this line was very strong and as a result of the discussions and suggestions that developed in the classes, many of the teachers of the county will go to their work with a clearer conception of the teacher's duty and with clearer ideas as to how that duty should be performed.

Miss Hines' work in English, Reading and Geography was also very strong. Attention was called to the necessity of care on the part of the teacher who is teaching English and many of the teachers before they left the class were convinced that there is still room for improvement on their part and will take to their work new ideas as to what the true teacher really owes to her class in the matter of good English.

Her work in geography, which is one of her specialties, was also very strong. It was startling to some of the teachers who thought that they were unable to do anything in the line of free hand map drawing, to see the really creditable work that they were able to do under her direction and the many teachable points that were brought out cannot but have their effect on the work that will be done by the teachers in the schools of the county this year.

One of the most pleasing features of her work in Reading was the practical demonstration that was given. She secured a class of little people from Charlevoix and gave the teachers a few practical hints as to the manner in which a reading lesson should be presented to a class of children.

Space will not permit us to mention nearly all of the things that were discussed during the week but we are satisfied that no teacher who attended the sessions and paid attention to the work could help but go to her work with a better spirit and with a determination to accomplish something and to develop the principles of man hood and womanhood in her pupils.

The commissioner had general charge of matters and used one of the seven periods into which each day was divided. Most of the time during this period was given to talks with the teachers about some of the interests that they make and suggested remedies.

Stress was laid upon the fact that in order to be successful, it is necessary that the teacher shall get down to real hard work, and that in order that she may be successful, it is necessary that she shall put into her work the same amount of energy that she would put into any other line of work, and it was strongly hinted that many teachers fail in teaching for the same reason that they would fail in any other line of work, and that is simply because they will not do the amount of work that it is necessary for the successful teacher to do.

The little conflict in eating watermelon and marsh-mallows and in throwing stones into the lake was also a very pleasing feature of the meeting. Mr. Woodley easily carried off the honors in disposing of the luscious melon and Miss Hines kept the crowd so busily engaged in dodging the stones which she was throwing at the lake that no one cared to take a chance on entering into competition with her, and she was declared to be the victor. Some of her efforts actually made the water splash and we think that with a little practice, she will be able to throw a stone in the same direction that she looks.

As for the social outlook, we should say that if the young ladies will enter the school work with the same determination to do their best that was shown when the fire was built and the marsh mellows appeared, the schools of the county will be in good hands for the next year.

During the institute, certificates were issued at the Aug. examination were given to the following teachers:

Second Grade—Ruth Dillman, Gertrude Scroggie, Mae Stellman, Oral Miesnar and Edna Danforth.

Third Grade—Curtis E. Beach, Engs Berg, Bessie Light, Ida Price, Willett Matthews, Belle Hemstreet, Eva Heiler, Sue Bide, Phyllis Hartburt, Anna Wilder, Stella Sedgeman, Myrta Ward and Austin Sheldon.

Charlevoix County Fair.

(From the Mt. Clemens Herald)

Next week East Jordan will open its doors to the biggest event in Northern Michigan this fall—the 34th annual meeting of the Charlevoix County Agricultural Society, Sept. 22, 23, 24.

The exhibits, in spite of the dry season, promises to exceed that of previous years. Efforts are being put fourth by the speed committee to secure a better string of horses for the races and this will make the races much more interesting than heretofore.

On the second day, Wednesday, speakers of prominence will address the crowds among them being Congressman Townsend, one of the ablest speakers in the state.

Among the attractions already engaged are two good bands—the Manton and Boyne Falls—who will give us plenty of first-class band music.

"The Aerial Shower," two professional nuts who have some of the greatest aerial and trapeze novelties ever presented to the public will give open exhibitions and are, in themselves, a first-class drawing card.

Ground privileges have practically all been taken up and every corner of Floral Hall has long since been spoken for. Workmen have been busy getting the grounds in order and President Robert Price and Secretary R. A. Brintnall are busy making the necessary preparations.

Practically all of the premium lists have been distributed but a few are on hand and any desiring one can secure same by either calling upon Secy Brintnall or applying at the office.

Throw dull care to the winds and plan to come to the best Fair ever held in Northern Michigan.

East Jordan Enterprise: William H. Jaquays died at his home in Jordan township Monday, Aug. 31, aged 69 years, after a brief illness from heart failure. Deceased was well known and highly respected, and leaves three sons, Walter, George and William, and one daughter, Mrs. Geo. Williams, to mourn his loss. The funeral was held from the Methodist church, being conducted by Rev. L. S. Matthews.

Bellaire Independent: With eight votes behind E. H. Harris, nominee for judge of probate at the primaries, Gilbert T. Bentley of Banks served notice on the county canvassers asking for a recount of the votes in Elk Rapids and Mancelona township. The incomplete returns showed that E. H. Harris was in the lead by but four votes, but when all the township in the county, with the exception of Mancelona and Elk Rapids, had been canvassed by the board, Mr. Harris' lead had increased four more votes, making eight in all.

Empire Journal: The Empire Lumber Company of this place through the T. Wilce company, of Chicago, has purchased a large tract of hardwood timber on the North Manitou Island. E. D. Dailey stated to a Journal representative that the purchase would include somewhere between 15 and 20 million feet although a close estimate was not yet been made. The timber was purchased of Frank Newhall & Son and will be brought to this place to be manufactured. The deal for the timber is by the thousand, delivered to the edge of the boat at the island. It will be loaded on the large Hoskins and brought to this place. The New hall company will begin getting out the timber this coming winter and the Buckley will begin bringing it here next summer. This purchase will mean a big thing to the lumbering interests of this region as the amount of timber to be cut up at the Empire mill will make a big addition to the amount of work done here and extend the operations of the mill just that much longer.

Boyne Journal: From Mr. Swift the Journal learns that next summer another large building will be added to the Duluth Home Commonwealth. It is to be a large stone and brick three story and basement building and will be located just beyond the present Home. The lower story will be laid up with field stone and then brick will be used for the rest of the structure. It is to cost $10,000 and Mr. Swift says he does not know where the money will come from, but with his usual confidence and trust in the good people he knows that it will be forthcoming because it is needed and they want it. It certainly is very much needed for at present with their limited quarters it is impossible to separate the smaller boys from the larger ones, and in Mr. Swift's opinion this would be done in order to accomplish the most good. We understand that they have a couple of thousand on hand now for the new home and another thousand in sight, which will be handed over as soon as the present two thousand is increased to four thousand. Mr. Swift assured the Journal man that the five thousand would all be raised by Thanksgiving and we believe him.

"There may be a shortage in the potato crop in this part of the country, but there seems to be plenty of them in some parts of the country" said a local potato buyer to the Evening News. "This report just received from Chicago this morning shows that during the days this week there were received in that city 276 cars of potatoes; same days last week 205 cars, and same days in week corresponding with this week last year 162 cars, or 142 cars more than we received this week. That shows there is plenty of potatoes some place. We are paying 55 cents for potatoes here. It costs 9 cents a bushel to get them to Chicago. The jobber is selling them for 65 to 70 cents a bushel in that city which does not leave very much margin for profit."

The husband had been searched for in vain for weeks with clues ahead of the journey of having to return to her husband. After she had been found she was unfamiliar and refused to leave her husband in death. Mrs. McDougle left her wife for a short time, and when he returned he was informed she had drank heavily. TRYING TO HOOD-WINK NEGROES

Democrats Pursuing Their Usual Double Faced Policy.

Upholding Disfranchisement In the South While Forming Colored Bryan Clubs in West.

(From the Baltimore Sun, Dem.)

General Winfield S. Hancock, who was the Democratic nominee for President in 1880, declared the tariff was particularly a "local question"—that is to say, a Pennsylvania Democrat might be a protectionist for protection's sake, while a Democrat in Georgia or in Iowa might hold fast to the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only. The Massachusetts Democrat might be a free trader without incurring of any kind, while the West Virginia Democrat might be a free trader only with respect to commodities which were not produced by his own State. General Hancock's pronouncement was regarded as a signal of the tariff issue, but it did not produce harmony in the Democratic party, and the general was defeated.

Twenty-eight years have passed since General Hancock defined the tariff as a local question upon which the Democrats of each State were free to act with regard chiefly to local interests. The principle which he thus formulated seems to have been adopted by Democrats in the West in respect to the relation of the Democratic party to the negro. Last week the West Virginia Democratic convention embodied in its platform planks demanding certain qualifications for voters, designed to disfranchise many negroes. Their platform also contains a declaration in favor of separate coaches for white and negro passengers on railroads. The West Virginia Democrats not only refuse to hold out the olive branch to the negro and hustle him into their fold, but they are determined to limit his political activity by a disfranchising law and to bring him under the operation of a "Jim Crow" law some he travels on the railroads of that State.

What are the Promises?

Out in Nebraska and in Kansas the Democratic campaign managers are negotiating negro voters into Bryan clubs. In Ohio no effort will be spared to secure the support of the negro voters for the Democratic national ticket. What pledges have been given and what inducements have been offered does not appear. But it is a safe inference that the managers have promised to do "something for the negro" perhaps to recognize him in the distribution of offices if Mr. Bryan should be elected, and also to take such action as the negroes may demand in respect to the remediation of the negro humiliation disclosed from the decay by President Roosevelt for the attack on Brownsville. Last week the West Virginia Democrats were declaring for a disfranchisement law and for a "Jim Crow" law, the Democratic convention in the Twelfth Congressional district of Ohio adopted a platform favoring "the enactment of laws which shall accord to all our servant of wrongdoing whether soldiers or civilians, a fair and impartial trial and an opportunity to be heard before conviction or punishment." This apparently refers to the Brownsville incident. It may also have a broader meaning and a more extended application and may be susceptible of an interpretation which will make Southern Democrats open their eyes with amazement and possibly with apprehension.

Race Question "Local Issue?"

There seems to be no ground for reasonable doubt that the Democratic campaign managers in the West, in the effort to secure negro support for their national ticket, are setting upon the principle that the race question is still a "local issue." It is evident that the South does not approve this plan of campaign, but is powerless to check it. The Democracy of the South is in full accord with the position taken by the West Virginia Democrats last week. And yet it is assumed by those who are trying to get negroes to support Mr. Bryan that the South will act in harmony cooperation with the Ohio, Nebraska, Kansas and Illinois Democrats, who are welcoming the negro into free fellowship in the Democratic party and probably promising to annul the decision of President Roosevelt in the Brownsville matter. The theory of Western Democrats that the race problem is merely a local issue is calculated to give the South much concern. Many Democrats in that section may question whether it is worth while to elect a Democratic president who may open wide the door of political opportunity to the negro.

Mr. Bryan criticizes Mr. Taft for adding to the Republican platform in the assertion the number of "poorly mount issues" which Mr. Bryan subtracted from the Democratic platform would fill several large volumes.—Omaha Bee.

Honors are easy again. Every time Mr. Taft buys a new hat Mr. Bryan answers a new hobby.—Omaha Bee.

Women in War Time.

Miss Ethel Everest is an English woman who thinks the time is ripe for the splendid young women of her country to show their patriotism by going into the army. But some one reminds her that the world has outgrown the amazon and that, should the enemy break down a woman, the brothers and husbands who allowed her to be shot down would have a hard time explaining. Women are needed in war, but only to smooth the pillows and make the bandages for the men who do the fighting.

BRYAN AS PROPHET FAILS TO QUALIFY

Disasters He Foretold Never Come to Pass.

OPPOSITE IS ALWAYS TRUE.

Gold Standard Does Not Slay, Nor Does It Write Future In Blood.

As a prophet William Jennings Bryan has never been a success. The calamities which he has foretold would have brought unlimited disaster to the country if they had ever been realized. But they never came to pass. The harrowing pictures which he painted were merely figments of his imagination, based on absolutely no foundation whatever.

It is well to have American remember that predictions uttered by the editor of the Public must be discounted fully 100 per cent, for all signs indicate that he feels the fates unfair and is about to begin prophesying again. A male Cassandra, Mr. Bryan might by this time have learned that the forecast of evil will never be believed by those who have found that in the past his vaticinations have been but empty air.

"Driving Country to Ruin."

For instance, when Mr. Bryan was a member of the House of Representatives in 1892 he was absolutely certain that protection was driving the country headlong to ruin and that, in his speech delivered March 10 of that year he drew the following appalling picture:

"Protection has been our canonical farmers has been driven by the force of circumstances upon their tree and has been crushed within its folds his companions have stood around and shouted, 'Great is protection!' * * * Thus in every State, so far as these statistics have been collected, the proportion of home owning farmers is decreasing and that of tenant farmers increasing. This means but one thing. It means a land of landlords and tenants, and, backed by the history of every nation that has gone down, I say to you that no people can continue a free people under a free government when the great majority of the citizens are tenants of a small minority. Your system (protective tariff) has driven the farm owner from his land and substituted the farm tenant."

How far this picture portrays the America of to-day or the America of any year since he made that speech any American can answer. Even in Mr. Bryan's own State he can find no evidence of the truth of his dire predicts of Nebraska have doubled in value.

"Murderous Gold Standard."

But during the four years succeeding that speech Mr. Bryan's agitation grew in no less nor did the demon which he had raised in his own lunacitation hide with diminished force. In 1896 he again saw destruction threatening the country. He had a remedy for it, a panacea, a fetich which he held up for worship—free silver. Here are some of the things Mr. Bryan said would happen if the gold standard were continued:

"I reply that if protection has slain its thousands the gold standard has slain its tens of thousands.—From speech at Democratic National Convention, July, 1896.

"The zeal for the Republicans legislate you about the future. The future is written in blood crushed out of you by gold."—From speech at Bath, Aug. 1896.

"Ah, my friends, there is another reason why people have gone into the cities and left the farms. It is because your legislation has been driving the foreclosure of mortgages upon the farms. * * * Work on, work! If the gold standard goes on and people continue to complain, the gold standard advocates instead of trying to improve the condition of the people will be recommended that you cedes your schools so that the people will not realize how much they are suffering."—From speech at Monmouth, Ill., October, 1896.

But whom has the gold standard slain? What future did it write in blood? What district schools did it close? Again the question, the country makes a calm reply confuting the impassioned orator.

Campaigning again in 1900 Mr. Bryan decided that imperialism was another danger to the country. He was sure that "the Fourth of July would be forgotten by all Americans and the 'spirit of '76' would become a name of the past. Speaking at Lincoln, Mr. Bryan said:

Love Death of Patriotism.

"The fight this year will be to carry out the sentiment of that song we have so often repeated, 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee.' If we lose, our children and our children's children will not succeed to the spirit of that song and celebrations of the Fourth of July will pass away, for the spirit of the empire will be upon us."

Is there any spot in these United States where the spirit of 1776 is dead and forgotten and the Fourth of July a meaningless date on the calendar?

One of the most ridiculous of these prophecies was uttered in a speech Mr. Bryan made in support of Judge Parker during the campaign of 1904, when he attacked President Roosevelt bitterly. This prophecy had it that military expedition was sure to follow the decrease in the size of the standing army. In this speech Mr. Bryan also emphasized the fact that he was then and always would be a firm believer in the free coinage of silver. He summed up his position on this question in the following sentence:

"I believe today in the principles set forth at Chicago and Kansas City (16 to 1) and shall continue to fight for those principles."

THE VERMONT ELECTION.

Result of Victory Indicates Undiminished Majorities for Republicans in November.

Raymond, the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, who is regarded as one of the most reliable political writers in the country, reports the result of the Vermont election as presaging absolute victory for Mr. Taft. In a recent special dispatch to the Tribune Raymond said:

"Practically speaking, the result of Vermont election is some fewer majorities for the Republicans than they had any right to expect, because there has been no determined campaign for the purpose of making a good showing in Vermont and few of the big guns of the party have been put on the stump there this year.

"There is, of course, a slight falling off in the vote of both Republicans and Democrats, as compared with four years ago, but this was entirely to be expected, because at that time Democrats saw the promise of his party for president and the result in Vermont is that you can scarcely a Democrat of the tremendous landslide which took place all over the country.

"As it is the plurality of over 20,000 at yesterday's election is taken to be an indication that while the campaign this year is not to be a sensational one, the election of Mr. Taft is overwhelmed by a safe majority.

"If Vermont can be taken as an index of the condition of public opinion throughout the country, it means that the Republicans will be in a position strength the Independence League defeat in the other States will come almost entirely from those who have left from Taft.

"The Vermont Democrats, while few in number, are extremely rockribbed in their sentiments. They make a point of voting in the fall of every year not worry on a hopeless fight merely because they want to set a good example to the Democrats in other States. In 1896 they repudiated Bryan and the free silver heresy and they did it largely by staying at home on election day. The result was a plurality of a little over 40,000 for McKinley, which has been a record in Vermont elections in the State elections of 1900 and 1904 the Democratic vote was practically stationary."

But He Runs on Forever.

(From the New York Sun.)

What will Mr. Bryan say After next election day?
Mr. Bryan will say loud
That he is an optimist.
Resting three times!
What of that?
He's the one great Democrat
Willing for his fellow men
To be heavy now again.

Tread the Commoner and learn!
Mr. Bryan, Mr. Kern,
Hall together on this trip
In the old, oft stranded ship.
(They have quarters in the steerage.)

In this antiquated craft,
While they gaze at Mr. Taft
Miles ahead—the race near done
And by Taft and Sherman won—
Mr. Bryan, Mr. Kern,
Doubtless will philosophize
And to Mr. Kern recite
That remark, already trite,
All prepared and often strung:
"Resting! Yes, but I'm still young!
I can wait another four
Years, for my time sure more,
I have got this thing down pat,
I'm the one great Democrat!"
—Julian Durand.

(From Sherman's Speech of Acceptance.)

The Republican party believes in the equality of all men before the law. In granting labor's every request that does not seek to accord rights to one class denied to others, the Republican labor asks no more, no less, and approves the record of the Republican party because of that party's acts.

It has helped to make my party's record in the enactment of the Eight Hour law, the Employers' Liability act, the statutes to minimize the hazard so to speak employees, the Child Labor law for the District of Columbia and other enactments designed especially to improve the conditions of labor. I cannot hope to better state my position on legislation than by a specific endorsement of Mr. Taft's Chicago declaration on that subject. That endorsement I make.

Knife and Fork Etiquette.

There are many people who are ignorant of their table manners who are fairly well informed about certain little points of etiquette. When using both knife and fork the knife is held in the right hand and the fork in the left. In eating pie the pie is allowed to lie flat along the side of the plate with the blade pointing to the fork in the left hand and the knife in the right. In case the pie is passed for a second helping the knife and fork are laid side by side on the side of the plate, with the knife on the right. Never hold the knife and fork grasped in the hand when pressing the plate.

For Brittle Nails.

Brittle nails are often a result of having the hands in water too much or of using too strong soap. If the nails are inclined to be brittle it is well to wear rubber gloves when performing any household duty which necessitates putting the hands in water. Rub olive oil into the nails every night and then pull loose white gloves over the hands, and they will soon regain their normal condition.

Hands That Perspire.

Perspiring hands are caused by a poor circulation sometimes and a bodily nervousness also. The only permanent way to cure a case is to remove the cause, but the work may be helped by the use of a few drops of sulphuric acid in the water and a careful powdering of the gloves every time they are worn.

A Word About Mushrooms.

Never use a mushroom concealing poisonous in the caution which physicians give. The process of cooking will do itself properly, but after getting cold mushrooms are liable to develop ptomaine properties and become hurtful. Therefore throw away any that may be left over.

BESSIE DAINTY,

The Prettiest Girl on the American Stage. With "Lena Rivers."

Lena Rivers.

The season has one great novelty in store for the public—a novelty that has been awaited with impatience, a novelty of which great things are expected, and a novelty which cannot fail to fulfill all the hopes and expectations that are heard regarding it. This novelty is the dramatization of Mrs. Mary J. Holms' popular novel, "Lena Rivers," by Beulah Poynter, which is to be seen for the first time at the Charlevoix Theatre, next Friday evening, Sept. 25th. The sale of seats for the presentation of the play promises to be very large.

Since the announcement was made of the production of the play here at popular prices, there have been numerous inquiries regarding it.

Great care has been exercised in preserving all the atmosphere of the book in the play. This and the novel's characters are known to many among the books chief chairs.

Seats now on sale at the following prices. 75c, 50c, 35c, 25c. Box seats $1.

MY QUICK CHANGE

I am an actor accustomed to coach and to study quantities and means. What is most trying to me in my connection is when I am requested to play a very, very short part in some unfortunate production which sometimes himself (quoting by nature to play the first part). I am requested and say I exact a double fee, but the wear and tear at my feelings are more than proportionately severe.

The character this week is some kind of a Sir Charles Cudderanus in "Bad Ulo." Military man in appearance and a drawing room manner, and a drawing room manner he seems to be. Fancy, then, my feelings when, in the performance, and many a fifty-pound pole have I had for playing the blacksmith in "Ye Olde Blacksmith" I heard of that pleasant lorenna.

I was asked to do so down at a certain great mansion at Richmond-on-Thames. At first I positively declined upon the plea that I was drawing large houses as Lord Pribble in my present character and could not be expected even for a single night, but the following letter persuaded me to accede to the request:

My Dear Bishop—You must come for a week to us. We are in England I can trust you to be a gentleman—no my dear boy, not to yourself. As for your theatre, that is exactly nonsense. Your Lord Pribble is over by o'clock; then jump into a cab and come to us. Dinner is at 7 sharp. Dress? Will be under one hour. Bring your dress clothes with you and you can change your clothes in the cab. Mind you can change your clothes in the cab. Mind you can change your clothes in the cab. Mind

CHAPTER XIV.

The foam of passion and frenzy bathed Gideon Hope's lips. He was a medium between the bare, raving out incoherent rage and defeat.

His pity had swamped him—and, infected and spurred for the fight.

Will he know that he could reach the roof and descend to earth, Kane would be one of the hundred speeding through the screaming labyrinths of the plant to cause relief of absentity.

Fear would lead him wings, money would purchase him the means of evading pursuit; still this man must be overtaken—checked, then—what?

Hope regained fresh focus, running a score of reckless risks he never realized. He was out of breath, his clothing torn his frame wrenched and bruised. He refected quickly, then in a flash he noted.

Lightning only to be under for a lower few hundred yards across the molten gaol. An entire house, elongated from its lane, and alone, was blood-red, burning not slowly.

In through the open doorway Hope dashed. The man in charge was calling on a truck, walking like one up to him, seized him, brought him to his feet with a jerk and swung their eyes on the panoramic of the inner circle of that great industrial federation, the "Amalgamated."

The man stared at the man, his face an other pale, only that the money package slipped from his grasp.

Hope sprang forward to seize it, for in by but, freed for amount, directly hands. Up on it he stood, silver-clad rail.

And then—a grinding wheel shrank it, moving quicker than human grasping hands.

Squarely, evenly, the flange cut it in two—one-half fell outside the rail, one half inside.

Lane smashed up one fragment, Hope the other.

A flash, a rustle, and the schemer throw himself free of the trucks on the other side.

When the train had passed he was nowhere to be seen.

Gideon Hope stood glancing at about the brightly illuminated switch yard

"Slipped up, eh?" he murmured. "Hadn't only for a time! I have clipped his wings—I have robbed him of his power—half the two hundred and fifty thousand dollars!" And he waved the severed lank mates. "A slim, weak people-serving man not money when he is? A thinking, helpless bear!—Cherry Kane, a brief respite, if you choose, but you are beaten, mine—I shall rule in the game to the end!"

* * * * * * * *

Disappointed, he was, perhaps at the furious reign of passion and recklessness. He felt that he had the reins of the family in his grasp. He had modified his plans, at the same time gle reinforcement in the power that must eventually ensnare and bring to justice the fugitive, Kane.

"A score of trifles, sifting alike—those scene what has sucked in overthrowing the political king of the state—now and secretly, diligently searching for a trace of Kane.

He could not go far—a beggar—Hope realized, and after setting his new plans at work he calmly reflected over the father does, the final search and grasping from the closing up of all the strange place he had woven in rain his enemy and restore to his rights the dazed Albert Tremaine and his beautiful daughter, Claire.

And a new inspiration filled the mind as he comprehended that brisk, bright young man Donald as Claire would inform her that accident—or rather subterfuge—had brought Kane to hide, and no longer need she continue her faithful part, nor her father remain in obscurity.

True, no tangible evidence sought for had been discovered by Claire that would surely incriminate Kane in the Everett Hope murder. But he had not "confessed"!

And Gideon Hope shuddered as he recalled how—only intuitible to his penetration he had hidden pure, innocent Claire Tremaine as—even to the slier with the arch-schemer, but his secret cause so wrested from him.

And thus he could go to Claire, tell her that his plan had fructified swiftly specially than he had anticipated; how more information she had obtained concerning the evil schemings of the Trust had enabled him to bring the scoliest magnates to their knees, how Kane was gone and a fugitive! She could drop her mask, and Albert Tremaine could regain your and, going late court with the proofs of the scoundrel Henry Hope had conceived, obtain justice, restitution, riches!

He could say to Claire, from the same heart roused, warmed, as he thought of her—of Claire, of his dear mother and girl given to life whenever the brooding shadow of the Trust temporarily lifted, secured.

That morning Hope went to the house where Claire had been living since recuring her position at the agency.

He had learned from the same source that gave by same assuming her new role—the bandaged general Blun, the Trust and retired curious and puzzled, as she was gone.

Gideon Hope knew, sincerely, he was glad for his sake assuming her new role—Gideon's plans, the reinforcement in the power that must eventually ensnare and bring to justice the fugitive, Kane.

"Gone!" he muttered, as he stood in front of the deserted house. "Not only for a time! I have clipped his wings—I have robbed him of his power—half the two hundred and fifty thousand dollars!" And he waved the severed lank mates. "A slim, weak people-serving man not money when he is? A thinking, helpless bear!—Cherry Kane, a brief respite, if you choose, but you are beaten, mine—I shall rule in the game to the end!"

A daylight Gideon Hope was his old cold, critical, cunning self.

Disappointed, he was, perhaps at the furious reign of passion and recklessness. He felt that he held the reins of the family in his grasp. He had modified his plans, at the same time gle reinforcement in the power that must eventually ensnare and bring to justice the fugitive, Kane.

"A score of trifles, sifting alike—those scene what has sucked in overthrowing the political king of the state—now and secretly, diligently searching for a trace of Kane.

He could not go far—a beggar—Hope realized, and after setting his new plans at work he calmly reflected over the father does, the final search and grasping from the closing up of all the strange expected revelation that seemed to swamp the very ground from beneath his feet.

He might find Claire—Claire! yes, as he had known he could drop from drifting his arch enemy whom he's sated blind hate? A wife!—the bride on the bleeding wounded the stole earth knew—and he, the almoner of ribbonad, wicked rite, that gave honorable and doubting, shrinking trusting him the keeping of villainy!

The thought maddened him—a blood red sun obscured clear vision! Yes, too late! too late! He had sifted the sacrifice, and as a lamb to the slaughter poor Claire had gone, a very victim to blind passion and hate.

It seemed as if infinite pity handed all other emotions aside—in his sheer helplessness this strong man wilted; he even trembled.

Blindly, vaculy, he went from the spacious mansion, caring for nothing, his dulled mind directing this course till the shock of the hour losing its first dreadful effect, the slow return of coherent thought might gradually in him to realize what there was left to be done.

Where he had come to for benefiting home, aged, stunted spirit had hidden fidence to suspicion or fear, and Hope had not gained that he was followed at a guarded distance by a balking giant of a fellow who in turn was kept in sight by a wire, forest-laced creature evidently of his own ilk.

Now, as he left Claire's recent place of abode, this double opposite still less attracted his attention. Hope was sheerly bargable of regarding, of analyzing extraneous surroundings.

As he threaded a lane thick with noisy people, the two men came closer together, and then decreased the distance as the man's specific form in advance of them.

When they had come to the most unfrequented and isolated portion of the town, and the big fellow hailed his companion abruptly.

"Up in Annie's room, the front," he ordered, in a hoarse whisper.

"Right, boss."

"Be sure—sure or ahead of him."

"And then?"

"Take your pistol from me. If I can't manage him alone—

"Yes, I'll bring a big bath for fight."

"He don't look like it yet, sure," muttered the other.

"Kane warned you! Two do the job, and a bonus—

"Yes! he'll be sure!" wickedly grinned the big fellow.

He shoved a bank-note fully in the grasp of one hand. This headed from the "partner" to the other, a single nodding to bound Hope, as his companion darted to the tender's side.

As a shadow swift and stealthy as Hope's own, Gideon's quarry, the fugitive, instinct of caution, of sixth observation, caused to hide.

In half turned, startling vagrely—a flashing sword cut the air.

Then cling.

He experienced a stinging contact over the left epidermis. The blow stirred him. He recognized that he was attacked and unmercifully.

"Can cowards?"

"Rats—take it again!"

The fellow was a giant in build; stalwart, confident, in his superior weight and on the probability of these himself vanquished, he was by a finishing blow.

How it came about he could not possibly realize; it was done so quickly, but a flash Hope's arms were about his form, pinning him at the chest and pinioning the dangling slungshot helpless.

How the Newly Married Should Act to Avoid Embarrassment.

POPULAR PULPIT

PLEASURES OF APPRECIATION.

By Henry T. Cope.

"And God saw everything that He made, and, behold, it was good."—Genesis, 1, 31.

It would be a strange world in which pleasure and pain did not go hand in hand. Appreciation brings delight because it is duty and it is a duty because it brings delight. But it should not in this origin was in disobedience, that there is in it, who is cultivating the power to see the good where others often see only ill.

Optimism, such that perverted type which blinds many of the facts, is better for this world than the dour pessimism that dwells all things to perdition, saying out that the race is in a moribund state, and adding, it is better to laugh at our miseries than to weep over them. Pessimism is the duty of every man to make this world as bright, as happy and as good a place for the joy it is to be, No man has a right to name a ground against the sunny, for he cannot keep it to himself. A sour disposition never is an individual affair; it becomes so in proportion as it influences the thinking of others.

There are two broad ways of thinking of life and the universe. One is to determine that man is so little and so wholly insignificant in the universe against his good, where all his fellows are those of God's creation, and he is deprived. The other is to find and to be the good in life and to believe that through it the universe is not made to mock us, but to make us and to make us after the pattern of infinite affection.

DIVINE PROVIDENCE ASSURED.

By Justin D. Bennenspier.

Thou shalt call me, My Father.—Jeremiah iii. 19.

If the world owed nothing more to the Bible than this one truth—that God is our Father—it would outweigh in value the literature of the age.

It assures us of a divine Providence. An earthly parent cares more for the welfare of his sons and daughters than even for himself. And so the scripture tells us of this Father: "Cast all your care upon God, for He cares for you." Men and women are inspired to think that God is too great and too free little for Him to care for them. And since science has unveiled the wonders and infinitude of the universe, we feel this insignificance far more than could those who lived in the former simpler times. But this one word, "Father," expresses what else were indeed impossible. Love and fatherhood do not take note of large or small. The least and the greatest lose all meaning in the term "Father." The prodigal's sin marks even the sparrow fall—less much more, then, than formed in His image and whom He tenderly regards in His own children?

We have now a sure ground for prayer. If God is a Father, He will listen and answer with His own and direction. He will come then to hear His will, small voice, in the sun's mars of forest and sea, in the soul's sweet inner chamber, in His Holy Word, we will have entire much of Him. And so does He invite us to address Him in the language of faith and pathos and love and prayer. "Do the Almighty Spirit we can go with full trust in our confidence that, even to any earthly parent, assured that He is the hearer and answerer of prayer.

If the idea of human fraternity, it is only from the fatherhood of God that springs the brotherhood of man. When we know that God is our common Father then we must recognize in every man of whatever race or condition our neighbor and brother. When our heart thinks go out in kindness, good will and sympathy and in all the gracious sentiments of brotherhood to word his fellows, then is he growing in likeness to his Father in heaven. And this endeavor is the common heir phase. Trusting others, they will trust us. Caring for others, they will care for us. Sacrificing things life's sweet reward. When all men feel that they are brothers, and all class prejudices, business strifes and social rancors cease. And then will additional, crowned source of human woes, be cast out from the earth and Tennyson's "golden vision will be realized:

Love lock the harp of life.

And more the chords with might;

Smite the chords of self, which,

Trembling, passed in music out of sight.

And then there come, not, but one, but of all, our inheritance. This St. Paul calls the "glorious liberty of the sons of God." Sin is the bondage of the soul. It is the fetters, sin that the children already enjoy in advance of them.

When they had come to the most unfrequented and isolated portion of the town, and the big fellow hailed his companion abruptly.

"Up in Annie's room, the front," he ordered, in a hoarse whisper.

"Right, boss."

"Be sure—sure or ahead of him."

MAINE IS REPUBLICAN; PLURALITY CUT DOWN

Bert M. Fernald is Elected Governor, but His Lead Is Only 7,000.

LIQUOR LAW IS CHIEF FACTOR.

Plurality Is the Smallest in a Presidential Year for Quarter of a Century.

Maine has elected a Republican Governor by a plurality of about 7,000, the vote being 70,000 for Bert M. Fernald, the Republican gubernatorial nominee, to 63,000 for Leonard A. Pierce, the Democratic candidate, and the Democrats are correspondingly elated. Along with the state of this state, the Republicans have won, probably, the four Congressional districts, although late returns seemed necessary to determine the result in two of them.

The returns received by the Republicans was far below the average. It probably will not be much over 7,000, the smallest received in any Republican year in twenty-five years. Bryan in 1896 got out of his votes, bonus and plantations give Fernald 72,117, Gardner 64,863. The same places in 1894 gave Cleaves 73,331, Davis 60,000, Powers 10,491. The recording places in 1893 gave Davis 73,128, Boutelle 60,000. Bryan indicate a Republican loss of about 4 per cent and a Democratic gain of 22 per cent as compared with the Presidential year vote.

Vote Largest Since 1896.

The total vote will be about 143,000, running well up to 140,000, within a few thousand of the record for the State, the largest vote cast in any year for 20 years ago in nearly every county and city.

The fight as between the Republicans and Democrats was distinctly local, carrying with it the liquor question. An analysis of the returns, according to a correspondent, indicates that the heavy vote rolled to the support of the Democratic ticket came from the element in the State which desires a modification of the prohibitory law, which seem almost on the statute books. The Democratic State platform demanded such a modification.

The following figures, show how the vote in all the Supreme Court towns during the past eight six years:

Year.	Repub.	Dem.	Plurality.
1872	71,888	59,342	16,545
1876	74,337	65,237	9,100
1880	74,541	57,712	16,829
1884	70,445	62,797	7,648
1888	70,160	61,238	18,953
1892	62,809	57,225	5,584
1896	61,962	50,140	28,836
1900	62,962	54,140	28,836
1904	70,000	63,000	7,000

RAILROADS

On Aug. 21 a special train on the Pennsylvania Railroad will leave Jersey City for Wanamo, Ind., a distance of nine miles, in the 24 hours, and at a speed of over 103 miles an hour, breaking the record.

An increase of 12 per cent in the number of passengers carried and a decrease of 9 per cent in the cost of fuel are the results of twelve months' operation of the Simplon tunnel, the longest in the Alpine railroad. Other roads admit increased earnings and decreased cost of wages rate

The granting of permission by the Interstate Commerce Commission for the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad to increase the rate on freight from coke to points south and west, which were lowered in 1903 and 1904, all lines but the Pennsylvania and Lehigh Valley, which refused to accept and used to spread to other lines. Hereafter the New England business will be divided among the five lines running southward east of New York.

The United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis, in two sweeping decisions, handed down last week, sustained the position of the government in its suits against the Santa Fe and Denver and Rio Grande for over charges. In the present act of Congress abrogates the rule of the "reasonable rate" which railroad lobbyists have employed by railroad lawyers, thus, in effect, it is claimed, the day of having the coupling applicable to operation.

The Pennsylvania has again placed extra guards on its overland trains for their protection against robbery. The recent reports of train robberies in the West have caused the action of the railroad company.

Congressman has been made by the Sou railroad that its new Duluth line, which, when completed, will shorten the distance between Duluth and Boston, where it connects with the main line, is now open for service as far as Lake Ossippee, a distance of 40 miles. Its completion will enable the Sou to carry freight from Duluth to Boston, Shipments of freight are being made over the new Duluth project along the extension.

Hitherto the western manufacturers may be enabled to compete successfully in the western and central states with eastern manufacturers of roofing paper, the Sou line has made a big stack in the rate charged for shipping this material. The reduction is from 28 to 18 cents per 100 pounds.

The Sandy Dickson railroad commissioners, who have been inspecting the railroads in the State, said a meeting in Lead to consider the application of the Minnesota law of the last session that any line using the standard gauge likes be required to their city to save the refreshing of cars from standard to narrow gauge lines at Deadwood.

Night Sweats & Cough.

E. W. Walton, Cmdr. S. P. Ry., 717 Van Ness St., San Antonio, Tex., writes: "During the summer and fall of 1903, my annoyance from catarrh reached that stage where it was actual misery and developed alarming symptoms, such as a very deep-seated cough nightsweats, and pain in the head and chest. I experimented with several so-called remedies before I finally decided to take a thorough course of Peruna.

"Toward my friends had gone so far as to inform them that the thing for me to do was to resign my position and seek a higher, more congenial climate. Everyone thought I had consumption and I was not expected to live very long.

"Having procured some Peruna, I decided to give it a thorough test and I proved astonishingly to the task of taking it, as per instructions, in the moistiest.

"The effects were soon apparent, all alarming symptoms disappeared and my general health became fully as good as it had been for years.

"I have resorted to the use of Peruna on two or three occasions since that time to cure a spell of bad cold."

The Star Aviators.

It is probable that the star aviators is one of the six greatest of all the stars in the sky. Nonattributing its brightness, it is so far away that it has not yet displayed in position in the sky, or in any perceptible way, change our position 186,000,000 miles in our annual journey around the sun. Could we be caught upon a between Arcturus and our sun we would receive thousands of times more light than from the star than from our sun, and this notwithstanding that the star is radiating as much light as some hundreds of metallic suns. In spite of its immense distance, it is yet approaching slowly in a southeastward direction over the face of the sky. It is also changing its apparent position by an amount equal to the diameter of the moon in the course of about 50 years. So great an apparent motion must indeed an enormous velocity in space.—New York Ledger.

TEN YEARS OF BACKACHE.

Thousands of Women Suffer in the Same Way.

Mrs. Thos. Wright, 1326 Vine St., Columbus, Ohio, says: "For more than ten years I was in misery from backache. The pain in the kidneys was so severe that I was completely exhausted at times. I felt as if a hot poker was being thrust through my back. I had dizzy spells, sometimes I would become so dizzy I would fall to the floor. The secretions were unnatural, scanty and high colored, and I had to get up nights to urinate. My limbs would have cramps and I was so nervous I could not sleep. I was so weak that I could hardly do my work. I was so nervous I could not sleep. I was so weak that I could hardly do my work. I was so nervous I could not sleep. I was so weak that I could hardly do my work.

The Gubernatorial Recount.

The recount of ballots cast for governor on the the Republican ticket at the last primary election began Tuesday morning at 9 o'clock. Subpoenas have been printed and sent to the sheriffs of the counties involved in the Bradley Warner recount proceedings. It has been decided to summon the clerk of each township or city who has charge of the ballot boxes, and the chairmen of the board of election inspectors who have the keys to the boxes. It is regarded as unnecessary to produce other members of the election boards.

Attorney General Bird has been giving his entire attention for several days to the legal questions that must be decided before the rights of the parties to their count can be determined.

While we supported Dr. Bradley, and sincerely hoped for his nomination, we question the wisdom of his action in contesting the primary. We think he has make a serious mistake for himself, and one that cannot fail to weaken the republican cause in November.

Death has again claimed one of our little boys, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Gallagher, who died Monday evening of cholera infantum.

W. A. Smith was here a few days last week on his annual hunting expedition.

The sad intelligence of the death on the 19th inst. at Milwaukee, Wis., from cerebral trouble, of Mr. Patrick Roddy, came as a shock to his relatives and friends here on the Island, as his illness was not considered dangerous. Born on Beaver Island Sept. 4, 1863, he was the son of Capt. and Mrs. Andrew Roddy. He attended the public school here, obtaining what knowledge as was possible from the meager opportunities which the schools at that time afforded. For several years he taught school in the different districts on the Island. Mr. Roddy was married Jan. 7, 1885, to Miss Helen Carmody, who survives him. In 1887 he moved to Milwaukee, and held different positions in that city, when duty he applied for a position in the fire department and was accepted. From that time his rise was rapid, and at the time of his death he held the important position of assistant chief.

They Take the Kinks out.

"I have used Dr. King's New Life Pills for many years, with increasing satisfaction. They take the kinks out of stomach, liver and bowels, without pain or friction," says N. H. Brown, of Pittsfield, Vt. Guaranteed satisfactory at F. G. Hines & Co's drug store. 25c.

"Gussie" Busch.

the optimistic tone of these proved conclusively that the children were having the time of their lives.

The ever watchful eye of your Uncle Samuel was quick to observe a few of the most amusing, which we give verbatim:

Busch's Farm, July 10.

Dear Ma:—

Mr. Busch is a angel and we like it fine out hear. Yesterday they give us ice cream. I had at least twenty-five cents worth.

Now I'll tell you what I do all day long. I go black berrying. I go swimming. I go donkey riding. I play ball. We have a dandy team. Our team beat the city team. We had a game empire. We are going to have another game soon. I have more to eat than a elephant can carry.

Wish you could come out hear. We are to have a race tomorrow wish could win the patrol wagon.

Well ma I am tuf to close for I told you everything.

Love to all, goodbye.

Your son,
JIM JENKINS.

Camp Busch, July 9, 1908.

My dear Mother:

I was enjoying myself very much and so is James. You know what time you left and we never got there till 20 minutes after 1.. I just thought I was in heaven when the train was going.

Maybe you would come out hear. We are to have a race tomorrow wish could win the patrol wagon.

Well ma I am tuf to close for I told you everything.

Love to all, goodbye.

Your son,
JIM JENKINS.

Camp Busch, July 9, 1908.

My dear Mother:

I was enjoying myself very much and so is James. You know what time you left and we never got there till 20 minutes after 1.. I just thought I was in heaven when the train was going.

Maybe you would come out hear. I know you would like it. We get everything we want. We get candy, honey boy and are going to have a little drill for Mr. Busch and he is going to have a surprise for us. We have mattresses to sleep on and we do not hang on the same nail our clothes. Each little girl has her own nail.

Mother James does not sleep with me. All the boys sleep together and all the girls sleep together. James sleeps downstairs and I sleep upstairs.

There are swings, merry go-rounds, see saws. Mother, I went blackberry picking and each little girl got a penny for picking them, but I did not go for the sun was too hot.

There are chickens and ducks here. Mother how are you and how did you get home and how is aunt? Goodbye mother and tell aunt good-bye too. From your loving daughter,

GRACE DOWDELL.

P. S.—James is playing so much he don't have time to write.

These letters are a fair sample of the hundreds that were written to friends and relatives in the city. Of the three hundred who participated in the outing every heart seemed overflowing at all times with joy and gratitude.

The demands for charity are innumerable and philanthropic men of wealth donate large sums of money for the different benevolent objects, deriving great pleasure therefrom. But when a gentleman from purely disinterested motives devotes his time, his energy and his means for the happiness of the child life, language fails to convey a proper appreciation of the esteem in which he is held by the community at large.

So this service kindly and beautifully rendered by Mr. Busch stands as a nerve to be forgotten tribute to the nobleness of his heart and the generosity of his nature.

Monuments in marble and bronze are erected to perpetuate the deeds of great men, such as heroes on the battle field, statesmen in the halls of legislation, scientists in their research for fundamental truths, and the vast array of talented and toiling men and women who have given their lives and their energy, to discover, develop and produce.

These suffer by comparison with one who simply from an inborn impulse to benefit humanity, and make happy the rising generation of poor neglected children, sacrifices his time and money for their happiness and his individual enjoyment for deeds well done.

That this outing will prove a great benefit cannot be questioned.

The impressions here made upon their youthful mind will remain with them always, and when in after life their thoughts revert to the happiness enjoyed on this outing, their thanks will be liberally bestowed upon those who conceived the scheme.

Too much honor cannot be awarded to the gentleman whose name heads this article, for his generosity and personal effort in making these little ones happy.

"In as much as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

At the Lake Side theatre this week Chas. Hector is pleasing his patrons with his clever work on the mandolin and banjo. Beside such Wright the funny sketch team, are making good with clever songs, jokes and dances. Friday night the ladies get souvenirs—pretty hat pins this time. Saturday afternoon is school children's souvenir matinee.

A Paying Investment.

Mr. John White, of 38 Highland Ave., Houlton, Maine, says: "Having been troubled with a cough every winter and spring. Last winter I tried many advertised remedies, but the cough continued until I bought a 50c bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery; before that was half gone, the cough was all gone. This winter the same happy result has followed; a few doses once more banished the annual cough. I am now convinced that Dr. King's New Discovery is the best of all cough and lung remedies." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co's drug store. 50c. and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

A Panorama of Prosperity.

An auto ride, on a beautiful September afternoon from Charlevoix to East Jordan, is a delightful about course through Evangelina, Marion and Bohemia townships, constitutes a rapidly moving panorama of nature beautified by the deft hand of the landsmaker.

The editor of this paper made this trip last Tuesday afternoon, through a section of country, much of which we had not seen in twenty years, and some of which we had never before seen. The trip was made in Lou Adams' yellow devil, with city clerk Lewis and Under Sheriff Weikel as fellow passengers.

To one who had passed along the pioneer roads when log houses and barns slotted the little homestead clearings, this latter day expedition was both a revelation and an inspiration.

Neat, commodious and well painted farm houses, large barns with high, side hill cellar foundations, granaries, fat cattle in the pasture, fat hogs down by the woodlot, large stumpless fields, hill-sides afar off across the section upon which the rows of apple trees can be counted, and nearer by, as you shift your line of vision, piles of apples upon the ground awaiting the buyer.

Splendid fields of thrifty corn, yet in the green, the fat ears crowding each other; great areas of sugar beets, yet gathering the saccharine for the factory tolks; brown buckwheat, ready for the harvest, and tubers awaiting the resurrection.

We have not the time nor space to speak, individually, of the many splendid farms in the section between Charlevoix and East Jordan, there are so many of them, and we would not like to discriminate. It is as fine a section of farming country as there is in Michigan, and exhibits a degree of progress that is a credit to Northern Michigan.

If any man entertains doubts of the future of Charlevoix county as an agricultural section, they will be dispelled when he takes a trip down through the country to East Jordan, by John Nowak's, Horace Hipp's, Swayne Payton's, the Hirds, and the old Hipp homestead.

Such a trip warms the blood, brightens the eye and cheers the heart.

Death of Edith Mason Lescott.

Mrs. Edith Mason Lescott, wife of John Lescott, died at her home in Manitis, Philippine Islands, Monday of this week, aged about 40 years. The sad intelligence came by cable to J. D. Markham, Tuesday.

Deceased was the daughter of late Seth E. and Ellen Mason, early pioneers, and was a niece of M. J. Stockton, of this city. She was a sister of Oscar D. and Albert E. Mason, of this city, and John F. Mason, of California; and her surviving sisters are Mrs. Mary Beattie, Mrs. J. M. Ackert, Mrs. Minor Ackert, Mrs. Silbert Ackert and Mrs. J. D. Markham, all of this city.

About ten years ago she graduated as a trained nurse from the U. B. hospital, Grand Rapids, leaving that institution with more than usual ability in that useful profession. She served two years in a Chicago hospital and one in Detroit.

She then passed a very strenuous examination for government service, and was sent to the Philippines, where she served with the army for three years, with an excellent record for efficiency and special equipment.

About three years ago she was married to John Lescott, a clerk in the commissary department of the army, and with whom she lived happily up to the hour of her death.

Northern Michigan is entitled to recognition in this matter, and Northern Mich. gas no worthier representative than A. J. Stroud.

STREET IMPROVEMENT.

L. D. Bartholomew Submits Plans for State Street.

Away back in 1868, when John S. Dixon platted the village of Charlevoix, he intended State street to be the business street of the future Charlevoix the Beautiful," and so he made it the widest street in the plat—82½ feet.

But the exigencies of trade and navigation decreed otherwise, and bridge street—66 feet wide—became the street of commerce. This was quite natural, and it is strange and regrettable that Mr. Dixon did not see it, and reverse the order in the matter of width, between State and Bridge streets.

In the matter of street improvement, every east and west street between the river and the south terrace has been severed and mutilated. It is pretty generally understood that the next street to be improved is State. And now comes Mr. Bartholomew, who presents plans to the council which we cordially endorse.

Mr. Bartholomew proposes a ten-foot park on either side, as on other streets; then an 18-foot macadam driveway on either side of a 15-foot walk in the center. This park could have a row of ornamental trees—the splitleaf maple, for instance, and adorned with perennial shrubbery.

There is good sense in the proposition for more than one reason. The width of the street renders it perfectly feasible. All the churches but one are located on the street, and the Carnegie library will adorn it midway between river and terrace.

It will cost a little more than the ordinary improvement, but we have no doubt that the property owners will approve the project.

A New Vaudette Building.

The Lafa hot vaudette has scored a success this season, and we are authorized to announce that it will be made a permanent place of amusement.

Plans were perfected yesterday whereby the present wood structure will be taken down and a permanent cement block building erected this fall. Work will be commenced at once.

The new theatre will be 35x90, and will have a seating of 450 people. The vaudette will be opened again as soon as the building is completed, and run during the winter with its usual high class attractions, under the present management.

The Matter of Judge of Probate.

The SENTINEL has, for many years, been accustomed to a biennial fight. It sees none yet, but it has a chip on its shoulder, and is ready for some dentist to walk up and hit it.

In this matter of Judge of Probate: No one has been bold enough yet to assert that the present incumbent, Hon. J. M. Harris, is not the best fitted man in Charlevoix county for the position.

He has filled the position eight years, and has abundantly demonstrated his ability. The fact of his high standing as an attorney makes the proposition self-evident. Judge Harris is a lawyer with a large practice. He adds to his knowledge of the law, as applied to the probate office, a large experience in that line of official duty that the people of Charlevoix county cannot afford to dispense with.

Therefore, experience added to acknowledged ability in that branch of law that embraces the settlement of estates and the protection of the widow and the orphan, clearly fits Judge Harris for the office of Probate Judge.

Of course his election is assured.

The State Convention.

The SENTINEL has received information by telegraph that the following ticket was nominated by the republican state convention Tuesday afternoon:

Supreme Court—F. L. Brooke, of Detroit.

Secretary of State—F. C. Martindale, of Detroit.

Treasurer—Albert E. Sleeper, of Lexington.

Auditor General—O. R. Fuller, Port Hiver.

Attorney General—John E. Bird, of Adrian.

Land Com.—Huntley Russell, of Grand Rapids.

Public Instructor—L. L. Wright, of Ironwood.

Board of Education—W. J. Mehaney, of Alpena.

A Political Vendetta

CHAPTER XVI.

The big fellow strained and struggled—vainly. There he lent his hand, needle like. Relaxing with wrath, he sank his teeth into one encroaching hand—almost sent its owner to the pale. He released his other hand. The fellow seized it with both of his own, holding on still with his teeth. Hope was easily baffled as to the exercise of any free strength.

This was the opportunity of the lady among the men—he—the same flying from his owner.

A dual-edged piece of work was his weapon. He had full scope—Hope was not only hampered, he had not even sent his agent.

One, two, three—the blows came in rapid succession. The skill lessen seemed to crack. At each blow Hope staggered, sank, his head plunging forward—then he was on his knees, and, dragging his free assailant along with him, he struck the ground a sudden, resistless heap.

The big fellow lose himself—loose, arm over, ground his teeth at the prostrate form and kicked him with his boot.

"No need of that, partner!" gibe was claimed in a sneer. "I guess I've done more than bargained."

"Hold!" exclaimed the other, with a start.

"He looks it," was coolly retorted. Then the speaker stepped and examined the gaping wound in the back of Hope's head. "Well, he announced, "he's got it good and strong, but he's breathing all right. Keep watch."

He bound on himself Hope's pockets, with the lady whom he had pinioned up and down the lake.

"Good," he ejaculated as an exclamation of satisfaction, at the sight of the spoils of the assailant.

The condition of his clothing showed that the assault lavished meditated robbery. Yet his personal valuables were intact, and the gaze exchanged by the men bid mind that the secured bank notes must have been the intended booty.

Then he readily surmised that Percy Pope must be at the back of this new stroke of villainy. He was equal to it. She's a bad and trusty tools at command. The stroke was a royal one. Besides, his man safely demanded his share for put out of the way.

"Out of the way! he was! as surely and securely as though entombed in some cave in Gotham. Hope was a firm, strong in which Hope found himself, and full of mystery.

Twice a day a wooden-faced man or girly shambled down the corridor, brought food and water, retired. Twice a day for them three sweeping days Hope had endeavored to draw the man into conversation, to learn where he was, and why care.

Poignant or obscure, apparent eligibility of place and occupancy was the man's uniform response—the attendant would not, or could not, answer to speak.

On the morning of the fourth day, as this man left the corridor—Hope supposed that it below three quarter at five: first, a folded note; second, a blank sheet of paper; third, a lead pencil, sharpened to a fine point.

Eagerly he opened the folded missive. It was unsigned, and the writing was rude and unfamiliar.

Thus it ran:

"You have 24 hours to do as directed—or die. On this blank sheet write a plain and correct statement of where you have hidden those 250 half-thousand-dollar notes. If we find them, you go free. If we don't—it's all up with you.

"Now the more is perfectly plain to the captive. His eye flashed ominously as he realized that he held the energy of defiance in one particular; that of the great essential of money.

But this emotion died down and his heart sank dull and spiritless within him as he thought of Lizzie. What anxiety, sorrow, she, must be had dismissed her to become legitimate. Based in a monster whose presence must be poison to her nature, and destroy her.

So Hope raved, sent, gave speedy and decisive to the contrary. Within an hour seven horses dragged themselves along—another day passed. In the morning, Hope was so far gone that he scarcely noted or thought—now. The attendant waited for him a minute or two when he came with the food that evening, as if allowing a chance to send an answer. But the prisoner only eyed him with hard, vacant stare, and when he was gone threw himself on the hard, bare bench that was his bed, and by world and yet acutely suffering, resigned in awful thought and prayer to the mercy of the Supreme, nation when Claire's and, representful face haunted his mind.

He could hear Kane playing his walking game. The man cared nothing for a companion—for of past he had spoken to him only useful cropping games of exercise for the limb. He was safe from exposure, while he, Hope, was out of the way. He was safe from any harm coming from his routine the secret of the hiding place of the money. Kane knew if this failed, he would certainly tragically remove him to the land of the dead. Time given, he could escape some shadow and he secure at least a few thousands from the Trust vaults. Well, Claire, and he not? What more could he wish, hoping to be some day, and, hoping gaining a new course of scandling. This thought sent high down Gideon Hope and Suddenly he raised his head and listened. There was a slight clatter in the corridor. Some one was moving about there and he heard the words:

"It's asleep. It's lost and will give him another day to change his mind. Then the robber returns home, if he won't give up the secret of that money—he's done."

Hastings returned. Grimly Hope refused more this time phase of the game. He was certain, in a critical situation, and he had heard.

Once more he sat on the bench, and soon again a foreign sound attracted his ear. It was not the tread of Kane, nor the heavy wooden partition evidently separating the prisoner's cell from the one adjoining. He mused about. The noise, resounding saving, ceased. Auld his deep sleep. Hope's eyes closed, and he nearly sank into a sudden sleep.

He awoke with a start, sensation, and opened his eyes with a vivid start. His head was on one side, and he was looking at the door. Hope was nerved.

He dropped them, as in the light of fright dulled his sense, clearly observed the figure standing a foot away from his bed, and gazing his sleeping form.

It was that of a man about his own size, but covered with an old cloak, his entire was disarranged, and he had his head turned up in a coil, as though inured there. He was a stranger to Hope.

"Who are you? How did you get in here?" questioned the latter quickly, adjusting to his feet and striving vagrily at the intruder.

"Not by the door," answered a hollow, whispering voice.

"Then—how?" began Hope in perplexed wonderment. There revealed in some mysterious way, he intended had gone out toward the partition. A square about two feet in size had been torn from the heavy timbers and lay upon the floor, and the man, Hope knew, had crawled through out of the night previous was now explained.

CHAPTER XVII.

Hope was burning with eager desire to overhear the man, in turn of his attirement, of the world without, but delaying it a while he inquired, with grave anxiety:

"We must not risk talking now. The attendant will soon be here. Set the pieces of board in place as soon as I crawl back through the hole yonder, and break the sawdust out of sight."

"Bamboozer?"

"As soon as the attendant has retired I will return, and explain to you."

He moved about briskly. Hope noticed, as he replaced the sawdust through, that the strange occurrence had caused him a lull of the apathy. He anxiously awaited the arrival of the attendant with the morning meal. No sooner had the man retired than the occupant of the next apartment pushed out the board and crept into Hope's presence again.

He gazed weakly from the exterior, and sat down on the bench to recover his breath. Then he said:

"How long have you been here?"

"A week—one or two."

"Starving?" questioned the man, somewhat Hope curiously. "You don't appear to be starved."

He stumbled in his speech, and stopped short in his speech.

"On—?" urged Hope. "Mad, you were going to say?"

"Yes."

"Then this place—"

"Is a cool house, a private lunatic asylum, I guess. Now, I'm ready."

"I half suspected it," answered Hope, "and, if I recover, brought here while unconscious."

"Then you never was—queer?"

"Not that I know of."

The other shook his head dubiously.

"Then you're a pretty hard case, in general principles, then," he continued. "Well, I'm ready to atone, if I can, for I danger. But your profit is different from mine. I was nomad here really saving mother."

"You seem rational enough now," suggested Hope, quietly.

"Oh, yes." It was a terrible injury on the head, in a railroad accident, and subsequently I was a nomad, that indeed my unusual capers and a careless friend to trust me to the tender care of those, between brute. I was anything, I'm normal from, as they call it, for a week. Then I not sensible enough to be troublesome. They shut me in this terrible place, a place dreary enough to drive a man really mad—the violent ward?"

"But if you have recovered your reason—" began Hope.

"They will release me when my friend makes his monthly visit, of course."

"Soon?"

"Day after to-morrow."

"That is not long to wait," remarked Hope, mentally calculating how he could utilize this patient's liberty to bring about his own.

He was amazed at his companion strong sharply to his foe, as dissolving, wildness in his face and manner.

"Long?" he repeated, dimly—"man! If I am not compelled these walls, a free man, by another midnight, I'm a maniac. I have to perform is not executed before the next day at dawn, I am a lost man, and I shall batter my brain out against these walls, crazy and unerring as the stone-hearted monsters who—treat my heartbroken pleadings as the ravine of a wild zephyr."

Hope regarded his companion strangely. The man's very soul was in voice and face. There could be no doubt of his urgent rational sincerity.

"I do not understand you," murmured the latter.

"Let me explain myself—let me be calm," pacted the other, placing a shaking hand over his heart. "It is so necessary. You see, I am will physically weak. That is why, when I found the saw, doubtlessly secreted by some former victim, I cut out the board to be free, suspecting its necessity—to relief help, and if I give you your liberty you must swear to help me."

(To be continued.)

YOUTH AND AGE IN GARDEN.

Former Likes to Gather, but Latter Must Cultivate.

Flowers, immeasurably accounted beautiful, have become alike a standard of beauty and the favorite theme of it. Age sigs the ancient Eost dedication a beautiful maiden as being "slender as a young palm," "sweet as the breath of the jessamine," "graceful as the swaying of wheat." Old China today speaks of the tiny feet of its maidens as being "small and fair," as "three-inch gold lilies."

Poets of our own race are in-tch of flowers, and many, such as violet, eyes, cherry lips, rose-leaf complexions, lady carting the tendrils, have become the trifled cosmopolitan.

Sometimes a flower is made the special property of a poetic heroine, as "Elaine, the lily maid of Astolat." "Fair Rosamond, flower of all the world"; "Priscilla, the Mayflower of Plymouth." Flowers and flower-like creatures are naturally thought of in a breath; girls and gardens seem to be long together.

And yet, poets' verses and fanciful bills apparently to the contrary, there are dissenting voices, if not as to flowers, at least as to gardens. Even Miami, they point out, had to be invited with a mild and passionate urgency to "Come into the garden," before she went and therein, who so insidiously look young girls to "Gather ye roses while ye may," said nothing about growing them.

That is the point. Youth gladly gathers, but it will rarely grow; it is too impatient. Therefore in the garden it is a great only, as welcome, bright and fitting as butterfly or humming bird, but alien as transient. It does not really belong; it visits. The true gardener, observant, tolerant, laborious, loving, patient, unwearying, must be content to keep own pace with Nature, who will not be hurried.

Mrs. Margaret Deland, whose diffusion are known throughout Massachusetts, and her admirable stories throughout the country, has pointed out that it is in middle life that the passion for gardening is offensive at its height. Many gardeners are not interested in their own to begin gardening; others who do not acquire till then their deepest enthusiasm.

Gardening is the especial recreation and delight of middle age and old age; for, once fully tasted, it is a joy that does not pall. The infinite variety of even the limited garden under the ever-changing touch of the seasons fage continually and never cloys.

True, a girl in a garden always appeals to a lover of poet and fugitive as Nature is one "long lovelier—an exquisite old lady, with silver hair and transparent skin, smiling softly among her flowers in the slanting golden light of a June afternoon, when the lie in course of rose and lily rises most richly, face reflecting, as so young faces slowly can, the spirit of the garden, which is patience, faith and peace.

Labor-Saving Style.

Mr. Perkins did not often comment on his wife's dress or make suggestions, but one day he looked at her so long and thoughtfully that she inquired if there was anything he did not like about her new gown.

"No, my dear," said Mr. Perkins, hastily "certainly not. I was only thinking what a saver of pains mean to be so elaborate, with the lace and all. Why not have a simpler made of dress?"

"Why, not, indeed?" said Mrs. Perkins, sweetly. "I supose you've seen one that just pleased you. What was it like?"

"It was white," said her husband; "all white and perfectly plain, and down the expanse of lace or ruffles or anything. I think I have heard you call it a shirtwaist."

"Oh no!" urged Hope. "Mad, you were going to say?"

"Yes."

"Then this place—"

"Is a cool house, a private lunatic asylum, I guess. Now, I'm ready."

"I half suspected it," answered Hope, "and, if I recover, brought here while unconscious."

"Then you never was—queer?"

"Not that I know of."

The other shook his head dubiously.

HOW TO CONQUER TEMPTATION.

By Rev. William C. Stitson.

There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God, who is faithful, will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it.—1 Corinthians 10:13.

Every man realizes that when he would do good evil is present with him. Inherited tendencies, the influence of his surroundings, the environment of his nature, the constitution by thinking noble thoughts, derived from the holiness of God, and doing good deeds, conducting with those who are honest and true, as a man walk in the spirit and he will not fulfill the lusts of the flesh. Good and bad are in every man's life, and we also tell are among the methods when God provides to conquer, and we are some temptation. Of all books the Bible is the best, for its pages are inspired by God, and are a revelation of His will. Of all friendships, the sense of sympathy and friendship with God in Nazareth is the most invigorating. The power and purity of his life may be a great help to us in our battle against temptation. Jesus regards the battles of a will real.

THE FRUITS OF FAITH.

By Henry P. Cope.

"The fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, long suffering, kindness, goodness, self-control against such there is no law." Galatians v. 22.

When you have taken stock of all the fruitage of your life how many of these things are yours? Though you have all these possessions, which are they worth without these? Here are the supremely durable blessings of eternal life, those that being present make the barren bound a feast or, being denied, turn the sweetest meal to bitterness and gall.

These are the elements and attributes that make all the difference in every life. Yet they are attainable on equal terms to all. The rich man sitting in the splendid restaurant will not find them on the menu card; his money cannot buy them. The humblest laborer, looking across plain, hears the call and finds all in face of wife and children and in the simple joys of home.

Men carry across the seas and over the continents their gold from one country to another, but they have no use for it in the land of the dead. Nor is it any use to us in the spiritual kingdom. Money is the mere symbol of the material, and, as such, it is of no value in the spiritual realm.

The reason why one man overcomes temptation and another does not is one so much because of difference in circumstances, but because of the difference in personality. Too may plead that man is the victim of circumstances. Man succumbs to his temptation because he yields to the direct combination the element of Christ; the other overcomes because he has within him the pledge of victory.

This is not undermining circumstances. Many a man's security from temptation lies in cutting himself from the surround associations of wrong. Let him make a solemn compact with himself that he will remove himself from the place of temptation. The devil enters the soul of many a man through his mouth, his eyes, his ears. The man who, for instance, sees a lewd picture, or reads a lewd book, or hears a lewd song, may be able to resist the temptation that may come to him, but he will have to fight a battle against it, and, if he yields, he will be a sinner. Let him make a solemn compact with himself that he will remove himself from the place of temptation. The devil enters the soul of many a man through his mouth, his eyes, his ears. M. A. LEVINSON & CO.

Next to the Post Office.

I feel that the country is indeed to be congratulated upon the nomination of Mr. Taft. I have known him intimately for many years and I have a peculiar feeling for him, because throughout that time he worked for the same object, with the same purposes and ideals.

I do not believe there could be found in all the country a man so well fitted to be President.

He is not only absolutely fearless, absolutely disinterested and upright, but he has the widest acquaintance with the nation's needs, without and within, and the broadest sympathies with all our citizens.

He would be as emphatically a President of the plain people as Lincoln, yet not Lincoln himself would be freer from the least taint of demagogy, the least tendency to arouse or appeal to class hatred of any kind.

He has a peculiar and intimate knowledge of and sympathy with the needs of all our people—of the farmer, of the wage earner, of the business man, of the property owner.

No matter what a man's occupation or social position, no matter what his creed, his color, or the section of the country from which he comes, if he is an honest, hard working man who tries to do his duty toward his neighbor and toward the country, he can rest assured that he will have in Mr. Taft the most upright of representatives and the most fearless of champions.

Mr. Taft stands against privileges and he stands pre-eminently for the broad principles of American citizenship which lie at the foundation of our national well being.

ENEMY OF TARIFF.

Labor World Sees Danger in Bryan Plan of Tariff for Revenue Only.

(From the Labor World.)

Workingmen and producers generally should not delude themselves with the belief that, if Mr. Bryan shall be elected President his plans for revision of the tariff will present no menace to the country. Mr. Bryan is the professed enemy of the tariff system. He would impose duties, if at all, for revenue purposes only. He articles comprising with what he chooses to call trust-made goods he would have no duty at all. Any apparent deficit in import duties arising from revised schedules he estimates would be more than made up by increased imports. Of course, his hope is to strike at the great protection states, which happen to be Republican in politics, like Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, West Virginia, etc. It does not seem to matter to him that every dollar's worth of foreign goods in the competitive close contest between the United States on a revenue or free trade basis necessarily by so much reduces the demand for home goods, thus displacing just that much American labor. What he wants to do is to rebuke and avenge himself upon protected manufacturers who do not agree with him in politics and who will have none of him at the polls, says an exchange.

But while Mr Bryan is gunning for protected industries and Republican States, once his proposed tariff law should be in force it would fall alike altogether, going to open the shops and mills! How will the attention of foreign manufacturers be drawn to the wheels of industry? Or the publication of customs contributions? Or the further harassment of the railroads? Or the reorganization of the House, so that the Speaker may be powerless? Why open this country now to the markets of the world when we have no surplus? Good demand to consume what we earn before manufacture! Under Republican rule we have just had ten years of unparalleled prosperity. Under Democratic administration we never saw best prosperity for any period, long or short.

BOUTELL ON BRYAN.

Is His "Shall the People Rule" Simply "a Local Issue?"

Congressman Henry Sherman Boutell of Illinois, opened up on Mr. Bryan's speech in Boston, says:

Mr. Bryan's question, "Shall the people rule?" implies that sentiment in this country the people do not rule. The only States where the people do not rule are the States that are expected to give overwhelming majorities for the Democratic ticket. Perhaps Mr. Bryan thinks that his question is purely "a local issue." If it is also, we, I challenge him to make a speech in Vicksburg, Miss., on "Government by the People." Let him repeat one of his famous anti-imperialist speeches, simply changing three words, substituting "Mindanaoans" for "Philippines" and "black brothers" for "brown brothers." Let him suppose that we have an chairman of his meeting John Sharp Williams, leader of the Democratic in Congress, and as vice-chairman the other members of the Congressional delegation from Mississippi.

And after he has made his speech on "Government by the People" let him ask the rule of the people in that community. I dare Mr. Bryan to repeat his caution on popular government in Charleston, S. C., with Senator Tillman as chairman of the meeting. Mr. Bryan's sentiments have a purely geographical sincerity. His epigrams and sonorous phrases are intended for delegated to meet local demands. Of this nature are all his views on tariff and taxation.

Mr. Bryan's proposition that every time a trust is formed a tariff schedule should be revised, and every time a trust is dissolved a new duty should be added, is too fanny even for comic opera.

If on March 4 next Mr. Bryan should become President, with a Democratic Congress in sole control, and should actually place upon the statute books the financial and economic legislation delivered by him in his speech of last Friday, it would plunge the nation into bankruptcy and bring on industrial chaos. If he should begin by repealing the duty on sugar to punish the sugar trust, he would upset the national finances by losing $50,000,000 a year in revenue, and would stir up a revolution in Louisiana, Utah, Colorado and Michigan. Then, if he should repeal the duty on cotton goods, because some hireling manufacturer of Fall River or in the Carolinas were dumping goods in China in rivalry with England and Germany, he would divert other millions from the treasury and invite still further industrial ruin.

But, of course, Mr. Bryan would do none of these things, any more than he will invade the South and exercise the rights of citizenship of Democracy in defiance of the Constitution with the battle cry "Shall the People Rule?" Mr. Bryan simply does not mean what he says. What he means with Chairman Williams in the North he repeats with Pedagogue Daniel in the South.

Business Men Honest.

The business men of our community are honest and their methods are sound. The President has never said otherwise. Indeed, it is owing to the interest of the great body of honest business men that he has made his fight for lawful business methods.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, to Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, Boston, Mass.

Gratitude to McKinley.

The highest claim of William McKinley for the gratitude of the Americans is that, in spite of the abuse of honest business men that has been made his fight for lawful business methods.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, to Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, Boston, Mass.

DEMOCRATIC HOPES DETRACKED

Taft and Foraker Shoulder to Shoulder for Republican Principles.

Another democratic hope has been shattered. That one that United States Senator Foraker would support the Taft candidacy, and would thus impair his chances of carrying the State of Ohio.

The two big Ohioans fittingly met at the U. A. R. reunion in Toledo, and publicly and unanimously cast what differences may have existed between them to the winds.

Mr. Taft's contribution to the treaty of peace was as follows:

"It is a pleasure for me to be here, Senator Foraker, because we have had a good one day in our last fried chicken and took a good deal of risk in putting a man of 20 on the bench of the Superior Court of Cincinnati. We are about to enter—or rather have entered—a great political campaign. It is a pleasure to think in this presence that we are going to stand in the campaign shoulder to shoulder, with the full strength of the Republican party."

In response Senator Foraker declared that enmity had existed between Mr. Taft and himself, and said:

"Under the circumstances I hope I may be pardoned if I say here in this presence—the first time I have had opportunity to say it—that there is not now and so far as I know there never has been the slightest ill feeling of any kind between Mr. Taft and myself.

"If there is anything I have a right to claim beyond another, it is that I am Republican three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. I have my prejudices sometimes as to who should receive the honors of the party, and they are generally found out when they are. But I am one of those old-fashioned Republicans who settle every such question at the convention. When the Chicago convention nominated Mr. Taft as the Republican candidate for the Presidency this year, that instant he became my leader. He has been my leader ever since, and he will be my leader until the polls close on the night of the 5th of November.

Mr. Foraker followed with an eulogy of Judge Taft's fitness for the office he seeks by repeating a last jingoism Taftism had told before him.

"I want to repeat it," he said, "that his experience on the bench, in the Philippines, as Secretary of War, in the construction of the Panama Canal, in all the positions he has filled, has been such as to qualify Mr. Taft almost beyond every other man for the Presidency. We are able to do that, and if he does not make a success of it, it will be his own fault."

Senator Foraker followed this statement with a review of his early and continuous will Judge Taft, and the favorable impression he then gained of him.

TAFT'S RELIGION.

A Consistent Christian with No Spot Upon His Record of Private Conduct and Public Service.

To dispose of questions which should not be raised in a republic, it is proper to say that Mr. Taft is a member of the Unitarian church. That was the church of his parents, and he has never separated himself from it. His wife, however, is a Episcopalian, and he worships more often under her in her church.

These are the facts, which are utterly and absolutely antiquarian. The matter of a man's religion has no rightful place in consideration of his fitness for the presidency. The constitution of the nation, instead, has carefully sought to secure the blessings of liberty to posterity by positively expressly places the very suggestion of such thought outside the pale of patriotism. No words can be clearer than those from our country's fundamental law, which religious test ever shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States."

The numerous queries about Mr. Taft's religious belief shows simply the extent to which his enemies have gone to raise some issue against him. Since there was no spot upon his whole clean record of private conduct and public service in which to find a pretext to raise a doubt, they have resorted to this last resort, the injection of their willingness to descend to any lowness to accomplish anything with a Republican Senate arrayed against him from made possible.—Omaha Bee.

Periodic Foolishness.

Latin novelist: "Ah, love is a fool at ways; every one supplies."

Union Labor Vote.

Hon. William H. Dorhman is one of the leading union men of western New York, and in 1907 was the Democratic candidate for assemblyman in Chautauqua county. This is what he has to say of the effort of Mr. Gompers to turn the labor vote over to Mr. Bryan: "I am a union labor man, and I want to say further that no man can carry the labor vote into the Democratic camp. I am a Democrat, but I am not deceived as to the skill, and three-fourths of them will vote for the Republican party because only in that way have they the assurance of freedom from business disturbance that Mr. Bryan promises for at least four years if he can be elected. We workingmen can't earn wages if statesmen are put in office to disturb business and make trouble."

Making or Keeping Promises.

The difference between Mr. Taft's promise of tariff revision and Mr. Bryan's pledge is the same difference as that Mr. Taft if elected will be in position to redeem his pledge, and that Mr. Bryan if elected would be powerless to accomplish anything with a Republican Senate arrayed against him from the outset.—Chicago Record-Herald.

CHELSEA HAS A NEW FIRE.

Massachusetts Town Suffers Loss of $900,000.

Chelsea, Mass., which less than a year ago suffered a loss of $10,000,000 in fire, which destroyed practically all the principal part of the place, was the scene Monday of a second disaster of hazard, when several important business establishments were burned and the loss footed up to more or less of a $900,000. The fire started at about 4 o'clock and had measured the same box alarms as Atwood & McNamee on Washington and Chester streets in the Hill District had been foundry on Fourth street, instead of the place where the fire had originated in another immediately adjacent and in the one which was occupied by the Wool Powder Burn Hill. The Chelsea building works and Lee Brothers shoe factory also caught fire. The large wooden building occupied by the Eastern Steel Tank Company and situated near the Boston and Maine tracks was next engulfed and the fire spread to the Standard Oil Company's station, where a large supply of petroleum products was stored. The flames then leaped shortly after 10 o'clock, which the fire had reached this night inflammable property.

WOMAN SHOT FIGHTING POSSE.

Wounded Fourteen Times in Battle with Sheriff's Men in Arkansas.

John Roberts and his wife received a sentence of 1 years in the state prison at Pressland, one mile south of the Missouri-Arkansas line, when the officers attempted to arrest Roberts for killing Oliver Rodgers, a neighbor. The records show that fourteen times and she and Sheriff Moore of Pressland, Mo., and Deputy Sheriff Wood, Roberts and the posse engaged in the battle. Roberts and his wife are serious hurt. Roberts went to Kissinger's house and with a shotgun and rifle, killed Rodgers, his wife killed him. Sheriff Mooney called several deputies and started to arrest Roberts. The posse was halted by the women, but when the posse came to the house, the women opened fire on the posse from the house. They retreated to the building for bees, Mrs. Roberts firing from within the house and the battle was finally ended.

BLOW UP MINES IN N. Y. BAY.

Troops Laid for Spanish Ships Are Exploded Killing Fish.

Three of the mines put in New York Bay at the time of the Spanish-American war did have fire in the magazine at Fort Wadsworth, according to a report officially confirmed here from authentic sources. The mines were laid in the harbor to prevent the Spanish ships from entering the harbor. The report says the mines were allowed to pass their usefulness, and the Spanish ships were lying protected by floating barges. The only evidence the spectators could see of the explosion was a dense cloud of smoke which was seen floating directly in front of the fort. The mines were laid at sea off. The soldiers put into small boats and dropped the mines in the harbor in quarters with a good aim. The number per 200 feet.

The speech from the throne at the opening of the states general in The Hague, delivered by Queen Wilhelmina, in the absence of Queen Wilhelmina, who is expected after her return from Italy, the speech makes but a brief reference to the difficulties between the Netherlands and the republic of Venezuela. "In our friend the Venezuela, still Venezuela," the speech said, "we have to deal with the Netherlands government and the Netherlands government is endeavoring to overcome peacefully." The only other mention of the subject is that "the Netherlands Venezuela is suffering a loss through the interruption of trade with the republic of Venezuela."

IOWA MULCT LAW ILLEGAL.

Judge McPherson Holds There Is No License System.

According to a decision rendered by Judge Smith McPherson of the United States Circuit Court in Davenport, the Iowa mulct law system, under which saloons are now operating, is illegal. Judge McPherson further declares the Iowa mulct law is no license system and that there has been no license system in Iowa for the last quarter of a century, and for that reason the court of three lawyers been a tariff value of honor as a between mulct in the State of Iowa. He further holds that no person today under any circumstances can lawfully sell liquor in a licensed state in Iowa. The decision was rendered in suit of the United Brewerie Company of Chicago against the Civic Federation of Davenport. The complainants charged the defendants with a conspiracy and sought to enjoin them from placing property on which a saloon had been closed. Judge McPherson denied the application for a writ of injunction. Under the mulct law Iowa saloonkeepers have been paying $600 annually as a tax with the understanding that it legalized their sale of intoxicating liquors and gave them relief from the old prohibitory law, which still is on the statute books. The decision is the most sweeping ever made in Iowa affecting the liquor question.

LARGE INCREASE IN REVENUE.

The receipts for Sept. 17, 1907, amounted to $1,922,735, which is a gain for the one day of $977,265. For the months day of $977,265. For the months day of $977,265. For the months

—There has been considerable inquiry and some criticism concerning the 100 horse power auxiliary engine at the city water plant. —Efficiency and strict application to duty are what is required in "court house" work. Can any man say that there has been a shortage in these qualities over at the official county headquarters? Has any man neglected his duty? Has any republican official proven himself inefficient? Have the republicans of Charlevoix county anything to apologize for? In the administration of county affairs has there been an incident that reflects on any present county official? If so, talk up! Get in your work now with your democrat organ, and not hold it back to deceive the people at the last moment. Be square, and talk up now!

—Every teacher in Charlevoix county should plan to attend the meeting of the State Teacher's Association at Saginaw, October 29-31. The program bears the names of some of our foremost educators, and the topics for discussion are replete with suggestions regarding almost every phase of school room work. Just aside from the program, the privilege of being a part of such a meeting stirs the enthusiasm and sends the teacher back to her work with many a new idea and many a good resolution that the stay at home never feels. Teachers, of all others, should keep abreast of the times, and these meetings constitute one of the surest preventatives of cobweb formation on the brain.

WILLIAM ALLARD DEAD.

Well Known Charlevoix Fisherman Killed by an Automobile in Kenosha.

William Allard, of this city, was killed at kenosha last Saturday morning by being run over by an automobile. Deceased and his brother Louis were engaged in fishing at Kenosha, having quite recently went there with a gasoline boat, under contract with the A. Booth Company.

The death of Allard is particularly distressing, as he leaves a wife and seven children, the eldest [of whom is fourteen. He had $1,000 insurance in the K. O. T. M. Allard was about forty years of age, and was a son of Chas. Allard, one of the few remaining French habitues of the early Mackinac fur days.

The body arrived here Tuesday, and the funeral was from the Catholic church. Following is the account of the accident, as taken from the Chicago Tribune:

"For the second time in the twenty-four hours Kenosha was the scene yesterday of a fatal automobile accident. On Friday, George O. Field of Manistee was killed when he drove at speed into an electric car.

"Yesterday a motor car containing fifteen soldiers out on a holiday ride ran over William Allard, father of seven children. His skull was crushed and he died at four o'clock at the Kenosha hospital, two hours after the accident.

"The car was driven by William F. Howard, former member of the Kenosha board of education, and a wealthy contractor. The accident was an indirect outcome of the purpose of the city automobilists to give a day of pleasure to as many Kenosha children as possible. Under auspices of the Elks, it has been for several years the custom to take the towns children out in automobiles one day every autumn.

"Mr. Howard had a big machine and he had loaded it with as much child weight as it would hold. He was driving on North Main street, and as he approached the intersection of Milwaukee avenue a heavily loaded wagon blocked the way. According to his own statement and also that of witnesses he stopped his machine to let the wagon draw closer to the curb. Then he pulled the lever and the machine started. Just as it began to gain speed Allard, unconscious of peril, stepped from behind the wagon and started to cross the street.

"In two paces he was in front of the machine. He was struck, thrown to the ground and under the wheels. His skull was fractured and he was injured internally.

The children became hysterical at the sight they were obliged to witness, and the accident ended the day's program of rides."

Be on Your Guard.

The democrats of Charlevoix county now have an organ. If the democrats of Charlevoix county knows anything about the republican candidates for county offices that they wish to say, as to their ability or moral fitness, let them say it now, through their organ that we may, through the republican organs make the answer that fairness and justice demands.

There is but about four weeks between this and election, and we may expect, in the last weeks before election to read all manner of false charges and unfair imputations against the republican candidates.

Republicans and all others who love fair play, should be on their guard against those unfair methods.

Chaloupka Block Changes Hands.

On Monday of this week Dr. J. H. Eichen bought of A. G. Chaloupka the brick block known as the Chaloupka block, and occupied by L. S. Sess as a grocery. Consideration $7,000.

It is understood that no change of occupancy will occur, although Dr. Eichen will probably remove his office there. The Charlevoix Wood & Cot Company and the Novak cigar factory low occupy the second story.

LECTURE COURSE.

Schildkret Hungarian Orchestra First Number, Friday Evening, Oct. 16.

The course presented to the people of Charlevoix this season is one of extraordinary merit. Experts in the lecture bureau business regard the Charlevoix course as the best selected course that has been sold this year. The first attraction is a musical number of the very finest quality—Schildkret Hungarian Orchestra. This is regarded as the best organization exploited in this country since the tour of the famous Hungarian Gypsy band twenty-five years ago.

The Orchestra was brought to this country during the World's Fair, and was engaged in concert work in Chicago by Mrs. Potter Palmer. Later this leader, Mr. Schildkret, was summoned to Washington to play at the wedding of Alice Roosevelt. The company includes excellent soloists, Mr. Schildkret himself being one of the greatest living soloists in the world.

This attraction will appear on the lecture course at the Charlevoix Theater, Friday evening, October 16. The reserved seat sale will open at the Ivy Drug Store, Wednesday evening, Oct. 14, at 7:00 standard time. Course tickets are now on sale at all the drug stores. Do not expect anyone to call on you to sell you a ticket, but purchase your ticket this week where they are on sale. The committee does not intend to make a canvass as was done last year, as it is believed that those who know and appreciate a good thing when they see it need not be asked and urged to take advantage of it. It will be necessary to present your ticket when applying for a reserved seat. Course tickets $1.50, single admission 50 cents. Reserved seats will cost 10 cents for each entertainment, whether you have a season ticket or single admission ticket. The committee wishes to have it very clearly understood that in no case does the admission ticket include reserved seat privilege.

For Register of Deeds.

There is not a person in Charlevoix county who can give a valid reason why R. A. Emrey should not be re-elected register of deeds.

He has filled the office one term. He is not only entitled to it by the precedent established, but he deserves it because of duties well and faithfully discharged.

Mr. Emrey has been a capable register, and he has been attentive and industrious in the work of his office.

The people of Charlevoix county owe Mr. Emrey a second term, and we have no doubt of his getting it.

Can You Name the Man?

We clip the following paragraph from the leading editorial of the recently still-born democrat organ, printed in the republican office of the Boyne Journal:

"You do not want to vote for a man that you know to be unfit for office, then why not look up both sides."

Talk up! Cough up! Dig up! Who on the republican county ticket is unfit for office? Talk is cheap! The republicans of Charlevoix county have no need to apologize for its record in the administration of county affairs.

Machine! We know of a bunch that would put to motion, and keep in motion, the most perfect and effective, the most intolerant and bitotte machine that ever came out of the brain of a political mechanic!

They would be a patent, and cannot get it. That is all.

Booth Cold Storage Fish.

From the Chicago Examiner:

Taking cognizance of the repeated assertions of Louis Polakow, editor of the Fish Blue book, that there are tens of thousands of pounds of decayed fish held in cold storage in the warehouse of A. Booth & Co. here, the health officials yesterday took Polakow to the storehouse to point out the poisonous fish.

Despite the presence of representatives of the Department of Health, the employes of the company in charge of the cold storage plant refused to let Polakow enter the building, although he promised to point out tons of his unit to eat.

After Polakow's estimate of the amount of unwholesome fish in the Booth warehouses had been published, Adolph Burmeister, the fish inspector for the Health Department, accompanied by Dr. J. H. Bichn, the director of laboratories, visited the Booth plant, examined fish stored under possibly a score of lot-numbers, selected some samples and carried them to the headquarters of the Health Board.

The fish thus obtained were thawed out, examined by the chemists and bacteriologists, pronounced good to eat and finally eaten by employes of the Department of Health.

After the Booth warehouses had thus been given a clean bill of health, Polakow declared that he did not doubt the particular fish Dr. Bichn had seen were perfectly good, but he added that the inspector had not made careful enough search.

This being repeated to Dr. Bichn the second trip to the cold storage place with Polakow was arranged. As soon as Superintendent Chase of the Booth warehouse learned the purpose of the visit, he said:

"We do not admit any one but the officials of the Board of Health to our cold storage rooms. We are forced to permit you, Dr. Bichn, and your inspector, Mr. Burmeister, but we will not allow Mr. Polakow to go along to examine the fish in storage."

Dr. Bichn submitted to this diction.

Another denial from the Armours yesterday stating that the firm has nothing whatever to do with the reorganization of A. Booth & Co. served to drive the price of Booth perferred back to 11½. But the sales were so insignificant that they were scarcely a reliable index.

Warner Wins.

The supreme court, on Tuesday decided on all points against Bradley, in the Bradley-Warner contest.

This makes Warner the republican candidate for Governor. The governor makes a manly appeal for harmony, and will at once take the field for the ticket.

SCHOOL NOTES.

County Normal.

The class has organized basket ball teams with the Misses Kathryn Lawver and Florence Sheldon as captains. The majority of the members of the County Normal, accompanied by Miss Hines, attended the fair at East Jordan on Wednesday of last week. Later, each one handed in a written report on what she had seen there, mining the lines of school work, hand work and agricultural produce.

Miss Gregory met with the class Friday for music and drawing. The class did some work in water-colors showing the color scale.

The organization of the class was completed Friday afternoon by the election of the following members as class officers: President, Mildred Drescher; Vice president, Kathryn La Due; Secretary and Treasurer, Florence Sheldon.

We have begun some work in nature study. A few specimens of earwigs, grass hoppers, spiders, and caterpillars have been brought in by some members of the class and children from the Training room. The caterpillars and spiders have been found to be especially interesting.

THE whole doctrine of Devoe Lead and Zinc Paint turns on these three points.

1. It is all paint and true paint.
2. It is strongest, and goes farthest paint.
3. It is full measure.

Because these three things are true, Devoe Lead and Zinc paint takes least gallons for the job; looks best all the time; lasts longer.

There is no such argument for any other paint; there is no other such paint; the man who uses Devoe gets the best he can get, in paint.

Notice for Bids for Carpenter Dwelling.

The Carpenter property on the corner of State and Clinton streets having been decided upon by the sufferers to the Carnegie Library fund as the site for the Library building, the committee in charge is desirous of selling the dwelling house thereon. At a meeting of said committee, the undersigned was appointed to give notice through the local papers of such wish. In accordance therewith, notice is hereby given that sealed bids will be received by me up to ten o'clock a. m., on Saturday, October 3, 1908, from those wishing to purchase said building. Purchaser will be required to remove the building from the lot within a reasonable time, and in such manner that the least possible damage be done to the trees. The committee reserves the right to reject any or all bids, it being understood that consumation of the sale is conditional on the library project being carried through—of which, however, there can be little doubt, as the promise of the money from Mr. Carnegie was definitely made over a year ago.

A Grand Rapids dispatch says: "The Rev. R. N. Holmes, of the Anti Saloon league, returned last night from a trip through Ottawa, Mecosta and Kalkaska counties. In these counties the league has been working with a view to the submission of prohibition at the next spring election. Mr. Holmes says the results of the campaigning have been very gratifying, and that the submission of the question to the popular vote is already assured. In Ottawa county where 1,550 names are needed to the petition, 2,800 names were secured. In Mecosta there are 1,100 signatures, with only 651 needed. In Kalkaska 700 names are signed, and all needed was 196."

Last winter I tried many advertised remedies, but the cough continued until I bought a the bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, before that was half gone, the cough was all gone. This winter the same happy result has followed, a few doses once more banished the annual cough. I am now convinced that Dr. King's New Discovery is the best of all cough and cold remedies." A Political Vendetta

By

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

Hope thrilled, his eyes glistened with interest.

"Its name, then, possible?" he demanded quickly.

"All one."

"Show me the way to freedom, then!"

"Do you think yourself I shall go with you?"

"Oh, surely!"

"Do insist on it! I need aid!"

"Yes."

"Do lassies yourself in the execution of the manner, should I be overpowered or incapacitated by weakness or accident?"

"I promise you."

"And you look like a man who means what he says, and I believe in you!" cried he, with glad eyes. "Very well, then, our course is simple. Alone, I feel I could not carry out my design, but you are strong, fearless, while I am a physical wreck. There is a dynamite bomb in my cell, as like your one. As soon's work with the saw will enable me to break out the framed pinning. Then there is a yard to cross, a high stone prison to scale, and liberty! But we must wait for nightfall, and all day long I should be tortured to the shape of suspense."

Hope's nervous interest up as if by magic. His cunning experience of the past week had well nigh dictated every thing a patient harvest for the poor lean convict liberty, and the prospect of freedom was almost near.

"I shall certainly hold myself solely at your service to the last carry out this mission of yours," he said.

As an alternative, the former agitation of his companion recurred.

"My mission, Hope?" he repeated, uneasily, facing the floor with excitement. "Hear me! Hear me! I'll tell you! And only twenty-four hours left! If I fail—if I fail!"

Hope placed a hand soothingly on the man's arm, for he observed that he was becoming frantic in his excitement.

"Be calm, my friend," he said, reassuringly; "you are not going to fail. Is this the way to freedom open to us?"

"Yes, yes and yes!"

"Will not I be at your side to assist you?"

"Then the man's face glowed with hope. He caught his cane on the bench.

"My name is Warren," he said, after a long, dreary pause, "and I am an every inch gentleman by birth, but I am an every Glycerine Company of New York."

As comfort and pleasantness was this announcement that Hope severally wonder and if, after all, the man could be really responsible for what he said, but the half, half, smile, half, tragic, half, pathetic effort to be cool and coherent:

"It was exactly two months ago yesterday that I was struck down in the railroad wreck. This I know by compare dates, for I lingered the days in the hospital from a nonsuper and an overland conveyance to this place. Now, I am perfectly, perfectly O! done to necessary meeting that I left in my Yankee Home, at Marysville, a sealed containing my latest directions in regard to property.

"You mean?——"

"What I tell you. It is there now, in the closet of the room I always occupied when a guest there, guarded by lock of a door, sealed shut!"

"Ah, I see!" nodded Hope, "you fear someone may discover it, tinker with it, and create disaster?"

"Not at all!" dissented Warren, sharply. "No—one would do that, for the letter is addressed, in my name, and I have frequently said the room. Again, the sorbed has a startling, big attached! No sound at once surprise a modder of his circle.

"Then——"

"Listen," proceeded Warren, his tone shaking—"It is nearly dye?"

"Hire?"

"Yes."

"I don't understand you."

Warren wrung his hands.

"As a chemist," he said, "I know that powder! And from the hour I left the mixture spontaneous explosion will positively, automatically."

Hope gave an awed start, comprehend.

"Then, indeed ——" he began.

"Yes, indeed ——" he echoed, cut into some deep river bed. Aye! or a hundred thousand will be blotted out of the world! Some dynamite in that little satchel to blow the Yankee Home to atoms in an instant!"

It was fated that what Warren had planned should be in a measure carried out.

Just after dark Gideon Hope and his strange associate in escape removed the sawed-through window frame, lea three active days by a trifle in the garden, found a ladder, and gained the top of the high stone wall surrounding the prison asylum.

Its broad surface was littered with broken pockery and fragments. Hope had pull up the ladder to drop it over on the other side. Here, could a faint moan from the lips of his companion.

"What is the matter?" he hissed quickly.

Warren was tottering, and Gideon grasped him to steady him with his strong hand.

"I have cut my wrist on a fragment of broken glass!" panted Warren, and it is bleeding profusely. I am so weak—so I feared it ——I shall have to the weight to go with you, Hope!"

"Nonsense—courage!"

"Nay—you must go—but, Ah! now it is not a question of choice!"

A shout arose from the garden, a rattling echoed. Two attendants came down view around the corner of the building to.

"Hith, there!" was gruffly ordered, and the click of a revolver cut the air, sharp and menacing.

CHAPTER XIX.

"Ah!"

"And leave you behind—never!"

"You must!"

Warren had summoned the strength to throw himself before Hope, so as to shield him from the revolver aimed upwards from the garden.

Thence had arisen the brief instruction.

"Down, the big one—left a coward!"

"Jump, I tell you!" insisted Warren. "They have not taken me, the two days I shall be free, but you—must! the dynamite! Save the innocent lives at 1840 hand ——"

"Go!" voiced Hope, frantical with the body pulsing before him.

He began backwards. In half a minute he was safe in the shelter of shrubbery, in half an hour, as the end of a seen run, fully four miles away from his recent prison place.

Hope, he was down on a fallen tree to regain his breath and calculate what was to be done, and the speediest way of accomplishing it.

He had expressed no generosity with Warren that the latter would be must lose no time in heading straight and swiftly for the hotel where the satchel of dynamite lay.

Hope put aside the exultation of freedom, the complications of the escape, even all thought of Kate of Helen, as he realized the sacred pledge he must fulfill at all hazards.

Marrsville was 29 miles across country. By going back on the track in direction of the prison he was to strike a railroad, but it might be to run directly into a hot search in the hunted fugitive. Again, he knew nothing of the roads which. He resolved to press onward on foot, trusting to general ships of direction and distance and to shun the stage coaches by day and daylight.

But, a man hastily injured in a hurry—hotter and short up in an unmakeshore prison for a week, Hope found that he was scarcely in natural shape. He proceeded more slowly than he had at first intended. The lonely country road opposed no bias. He became footsore and dizzy, required to rest.

Hope welcomed a light shanty in the distance. He kept in its sight as a beacon, and traced it to the window of a lone, lone a woman.

"What you want?" he challenged gruffly.

"A horse, or a hotse and vehicle," he queried Hope promptly, "duty for a few hours. See—I will pay liberally! Hire, give me a horse!"

Marrsville—

"You go as hoss," advised the man, "and there's no place between here and Marrsville. Take a horse of some land could get a rig-held out?" he interrupted himself. "There's—"

"Where?" eagerly demanded Hope.

"Ma—Mam the road a hoss—"

"Yes?"

"You'll come on the old Thornbyby place. Some strangers have rented it lately, and they keep a horse and carriage—have some."

"Good!"

Hope tossed the man a coin as a reward for his cheerfully information, and turned away with renewed ardor.

The district was rough, barren and not a habitation of other had once been quite a settlement of other had once been quite a populous region, now deserted in its poverty in the crusade.

Hope, he was a man of resolute and able. He approached, he, too, made on one hot in the hotel.

"I must get a conveyance here, he insisted to the man who came to the door. Marrsville, but I don't seem to be able to go on foot. Can you hire me a horse?"

Thus had south fell from his lips in a wild agony, as a sudden pain shot through his frame, and he sank down seated in a lighted room, and sunken in pleasure.

The windows were open, the laughter of the man pitiably.

"Poor Kinks!"

"He was in a trance, rented, incredulous, Hope gazed in at the sack. His brows knitted, the all fire of hatred and vengeance crowded back the mission. Dull and cramped gazed him to the ceiling, on this—dull, unmountable discovery.

Firmly he set his lips—his hands clenched—unbosom—his breath came hard. Glad man was sunken in the chair, Hope gave the door behind him, and the lady approached in a hurry—at its end the door closed a hallway—at its end the door opened into a room.

"He shall tell me—of her—of Gideon Hope!" was the thought, the cry

WORLD-WIDE PENNY POSTAGE

Made Possible by Recent Robust, Constructive Republican Policy.

Convention Between America and England in Effect Oct. 1—Its Blessings to Foreign Born Citizens.

OTTAWA, NO. 1052.

It is hereby ordered, That, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1898, the postage rate applicable to letters mailed in United States, addressed for delivery at any place in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall be two (2) cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce.

Letters unpaid or short paid shall be dispatched to destination, but double the deficient postage, calculated at said rate, shall be collectible of the addressees upon the delivery of the unpaid or short paid letters.

G. V. L. MEYER,
Postmaster General.

Behind this slender statement is a vast amount of Republican constructive legislation which resulted in the significant accomplishment, set forth by the Postmaster General. It is eloquently prophetic of a world-wide penny postage, for which the credit will be due to a Republican administration.

Sixth Universal Postal Congress. The Sixth Universal Postal Congress convened in the city of Rome, Italy, April 7 and continued until May 26, 1897. Forty-five countries, including the United States, were represented. The assembly was for the purpose of improving the postal systems of all nations and, if possible, agreeing upon measures for the improvement in all practical ways, of the regulations governing international intercourse through the mails. The first congress of this kind met in Berne, Switzerland, in 1874.

The United States Postoffice Department was represented in this World Postal Congress by two delegates—Colonel Shallenberger, of Division of Foreign Mails, as in previous postal congresses, and the Hon. Edward Rosewater of the Omaha Bee, who had also served in the preceding postal congresses.

More for Universal Penny Postage. At the Universal Postal Congress representatives of the United States proposed a universal twoent postage to all nations. The Hon. J. Henniker Heaton, M. P., who is the father of the twocent idea in England, speaking of America's action at the Rome congress, plead for standing out for a universal twocent postal rate, said:

"The British members stood coldly by. They did not recognize that this was a great historic occasion, a worthy parallel of that solemn scene on July 4, 1776, when the Declaration of Independence was adopted. If the Americans are willing to adopt a penny postage to all parts of the world, it is low that they are willing to establish it in the British Empire and form with us a Postoffice Postal Union."

The Hon. Whitelaw Reid, America's Republican minister to the Court of St. James, pleaded the work of the American delegation and solicited the friendly cooperation of the British government at a Fourth of July banquet speech in London in 1897. Mr. Reid said:

"The Americans people hoped for cheaper and cheaper communications with all other nations as the best means of promoting better acquaintance and persuasiving friendship. They were gratified to find that the British apostle of penny postage (Mr. Heaton) at this moment focusing his efforts on what ought to be the easy task of persuading the authorities on both sides of the Atlantic, that it was as cheap to carry a letter from London to New York as from London to Calcutta; or from New York to Manila—and quite as useful."

American Republicans Lead the Way. So it has come to pass that the United States, under its Republican administration, has finally succeeded in persuading the Universal Postal Congress to adopt a convention with Great Britain thereby effect the 1st of October this year, a twocent postage rate will obtain between this country and England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. We already have such an arrangement with Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Tonsmus and our colonial possessions. This great accomplishment is universally recognized as the proper beginning which is to result in a universal two-cent postage rate around the world.

Important Things Accomplished. Two other important things that the Republican administration accomplished at the Rome Universal Postal Congress through its representatives, must not be lost sight of. One was the adoption of a universal return coupon stamp, in exchange for which, upon its presentation at a postoffice in another country, the person presenting it shall receive a postage stamp of the value of 5 cents, good in any country of the world, issue entitling people here to penny postage at regular rates upon reply letters.

The other significant concession was that in all World Postal Congresses to be held in the future, the United States is to be granted an additional vote, in

LABOR LEGISLATION

Republican States Have Been Liberal in Legislation for Labor.

Democratic States Have Done Little to Make Labor Conditions Better Within Their Bounds.

It is a fact that every important step for the benefit of American labor has been taken either by a Republican Congress and administration, or by the Legislature of a Republican state, of course with the consent, and sometimes by the advice, of the State executive. Democratic Congresses have been notably negligent in this respect, and Democratic States have either done nothing to make labor conditions better within their bounds, or have slowly and reluctantly followed at a distance in the trail of Republican reforms.

State Legislation.

The States have control of labor legislation within their respective bounds, federal authority being confined, so far as labor is concerned, to the District of Columbia and the territories, federal reservations and federal public works. The story of labor legislation shows that nearly all laws for reform originated in Republican States, and at the present day the Republicans are far ahead of the Democrats in the enactment and enforcement of laws for the welfare of men and women and children who work for a living. Twenty-six out of thirty Republican States have labor bureaus, and only seven out of twelve Democratic States have similar bureaus, without which labor laws are often dead letters. Twenty-three Republican States have factory inspectors to see to the enforcement of the factory laws. Only six Democratic States have factory inspection laws. Fifteen States—thirteen Republican and two Democratic—have free employment agencies. Eighteen States have laws on their statute books prohibiting labor on government works or public contracts for more than eight hours a day. Of these States—sixteen are Republican and two Democratic. Four Republican States and one Democratic State have laws declaring eight hours to be a legal working day in the absence of a contract. Twenty-seven States prohibit the employment of children under fourteen years of age in factories. Of these twenty-three are Republican and four are Democratic States. Laws limiting the hours of the employment of children in factories of stores have been adopted in twenty-four Republican and thirteen Democratic States. Eighteen Republican and ten Democratic States prohibit night work by children. Twelve Republican and three Democratic States prohibit the employment of children in operating dangerous machinery. Twenty-five Republican and six Democratic States have laws limiting the hours of labor of women in factories of stores. Twenty-five Republican and six Democratic States limit the hours of labor of women. It should be noted that twelve of the Republican States which limit women's hours of labor have factory inspectors to see that the law is obeyed, while only three of the Democratic States make such provision. In twenty-three Republican and two Democratic States employers are required by law to provide seats for female workers. Twelve States have enacted legislation intended to effect the extinction of the sweating system, with its degrading and revolting accessories. Of these twelve States six are Republican and six Democratic. Seventeen Republican and five Democratic States have laws requiring the payment of wages weekly or fortnightly, or, in some instances, prohibiting a longer period than one month between pay days.

Trade Union Labels.

Fourteen Republican States and only three Democratic States have laws in force prohibiting conspiracy from disturbing persons on account of membership in labor organizations, or from compelling persons to agree not to become members of labor organizations as a condition of securing employment or continuing in their employ. Forty States have passed laws allowing trade unions to adopt labels or trade marks to be used to designate products of the labor of their members, and prohibiting the counterfeiting of the use of such labels or trade-marks by unauthorized persons. Of these States twenty-eight are Republican and twelve are Democratic.

The foregoing presents for consideration by intelligent, patriotic labor substantial facts and figures taken from the statute books of the several States. No platitude can upset them. They prove the records of the Republican party and of the Democracy on the labor issue, and they must convince every reasonable reader that the Republican party has not only brought American labor up to its present honorable standard, but that labor can look only to the Republican party for assurance of protection and prosperity in the future.

Would Restrain Universal Trusts. Mr. Hanna asks the question: "And what will it do with the trusts. I answer that I would restrain universal trusts and with all the efficiency of injunctive process and would punish with all the severity of criminal process every attempt on the part of aggregated capital to suppress competition.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, at Columbus, Ohio.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Care of Children's Nails.

If a child's finger and toe nails are properly cared for from infancy the fingers will be a pretty shape and the danger of ingrowing toe nails and other ailments of the feet will be lessened. The finger nails should always be filed and not cut. Filing the nails will keep them thin and delicate. The nails should be rubbed to an oval shape, and if the fingers are inclined to be knotty they will often make them look more. It is not wise to make the child nervous and cross by monkeying the nails from its mother, for all that is necessary is to keep the nails clean and filed and the skin around the nail moist and pushed back.

The toe nails may be cut, although the best method is to file them with a nail file or an emery stick. They should be cut straight across and not curved to the shape of the toe.

Treatment For Burns.

In cases where the burn is not serious enough to require the services of a doctor, alum will be found to bring speedy relief. Dissolve two ounces of alum in one pint of hot water. Saturate cotton flecks in this solution and keep the burn well wrapped in them. The pain will soon come and the heat will growing will commence immediately. If alum is not handy, use common baking powder. Sprinkle the burned surface with the baking soda and then cover with a wet cloth. When the burn is only slight the pain will cease immediately and not one application is necessary, but when the injury extends deeper more than half a dozen applications of the baking soda applications will be necessary.

The white of an egg also is excellent for use on burns. Apply it with a soft brush or a wisp of old muslin. As soon as this dries put on another layer of the egg.

Electric Carpet Cleaner.

Electricity is now being used to operate carpet cleaners. A Pittsburg man recently patented the apparatus shown in the accompanying illustration, which is more serviceable than the pneumatic cleaner for small houses. It resembles the familiar carpet sweeper in appearance. A motor operates a turbine and brush, the revolutions of the latter agitating the fabric of the carpet and loosening the dirt. The turbine creates a suction, drawing up all dust and dirt and depositing it in a dust receiver provided for the purpose. It is claimed that carpets can be thoroughly cleaned on the floor and every corner can be reached. Nothing need be moved. Attachable appliances are also provided for treating walls, ceilings, cornices, mouldings, curtains, etc. Mattresses, cushions, upholstered furniture and pillows can also be treated as well as cleaned by this appliance. The machine works automatically. Power is used to operate the apparatus can be obtained from the ordinary incandescent socket.

FOR THE CHILDREN

A Little Wee-kid.

Why is it very hard for a goat to be good?

This question was asked during the noon recess at the little red schoolhouse one day. The boy who asked it is quite a funny boy, so everybody tried to give a funny answer.

"Because he won't mind his ma," ventured another.

"Because he doesn't know how," lisped a pretty little fellow with yellow curls.

"Because he gives too many butts," said the dear little schoolmam, glancing pityingly at certain scholars who are fond of making excuses.

"Because people are never extra good to him," answered a tall boy rather sheepishly.

"I don't know about that," put in a chubby little maid. "Some people are very good to goats."

"All wrong!" cried the funny boy. "Do you give up? Why is it very hard for a goat to be good? I made it up my own self. Do you want to know?"

"Yes, yes. Tell us!" cried one and all.

"Well," said the funny boy very seriously, "the reason he was born a little wee-kid."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Game of Initials.

A leader is first chosen who begins the game by giving the initials of a quotation or a proverb. The player to the left of that person makes a remark whose words begin with the initials of that quotation or proverb in proper order or some epithet beginning with those initials. The others, one and all, address the first player in like manner. Whenever the player addressed can answer one of the others with a sentence or epithet beginning with the latter's initials before the next player speaks then all the players must address the one so answered, and so the game goes on.

For instance, if the player's initials are A. E. B. he may be addressed as "an exquisite beauty," "ants eggs bronzed," "apple eating brutalities," "an early bird," etc.

A similar game is known in Germany, where it is called Namenspiel (name play). In it the names or epithets are given, one by one, by each player to his neighbor, who must guess to whom they refer.

Hanged, Not Hung.

A well known English critic many years ago in commenting on some amusing American sayings, called special attention to the common use in this country of the word "hung" instead of "hanged" when connected with the executions of a malefactor. In England, he said, pictures are hung, curtains are hung, but felons are hanged. In the United States, on the contrary, felons are treated like bedpieces and curtains and are all "hung." There was a time when this criticism was just, but no careful speaker or writer in this country now uses "hung" in that connection. "Hanged" is right, of course, and the wide awakers should remember that.

Attorney General Bird on Primary Elections.

"We have not passed beyond the experimental stage in the primary election system; that is the main cause of trouble," said Attorney General Bird in a recent interview. It makes no difference what some think of the system, as industrious as may be we must make up our minds to accept the fact the system has come to stay. The faults which have cropped out at the recent primary can easily be corrected and the law made better in every way, just as it was improved two years ago. It is an old Old Michigan saint to me when I asked him how he liked the primary reform system: "Well, I don't jes' know, but I reckon it gives all us fellows a bettr better chance than the old way," he replied.

The principal defect found in the system in the election just passed has been the participation by democrats in the republican primary. Unquestionably this was done in an extensive way in some sections. The law must be so amended as to require an enrollment in April in order to vote at the primary in September. An early enrollment will do away with this swapping parties at the time of a primary. In April the lines have not been drawn so that the members of one party will wish to vote at the primaries of the other unless they are going over for good. One much needed change is a provision making it mandatory for all parties to make nomination at primaries.

"Judging from our experience, I should say that the system would better be made optional for counties, but if the system is adopted in any county it should be mandatory on all parties. This might be accomplished by submitting the matter of adopting the system to all voters, and if they voted in favor of it, then require all parties to nominate under it. If the law is to be made to cover all nominations, it should be made plain that primaries not be brought under that provision. I have seen enough of conditions up there to know that primary can bring about a serious situation up there. The moving population which only stays in a place as long as work is found, can be induced to lend its aid to placing men in office who will enforce the law. The state has had some experience with that very thing. This shifting vote is generally against law enforcement, as we believe in it in this country. Because of this promise to allow the ind to be taken off and some offenses considered and overlooked will secure votes for unscrupulous men under the primary system in certain sections, because many times a large percentage of the population are those of men who have not our appreciation of the responsibilities of representative and republican government. Frankly, under the recent system this vote can be controlled and law abiding people can name good men for office, but under much better conditions will prevail in consequence in those sections."

Robert Croom of the Creole Hotel, Vaughn, Miss., says: "For several months I had a severe cough, and consumption seemed to have its grip on me, when a friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery. Detectives, two policemen and the burglars exploded on record and saved the firm of Joseph Buchanan & Co. 704 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, $250,000 worth of gems, but were blown up when dynamite let by the burglars. Five of the detectives were severely injured when one of their number tampered with the explosives. The attempt to beat the jewelry store was discovered by a hospital attendant, who sent two men to the spot on a run shortly after noon. The private detectives arrived just in time to hear the burglars escaping by a rear door. They summoned members of the regular detective force, who entered the place by the rear door and by the aid a supply of dynamite which was all ready to be used, cut off the bands of an electric battery. Reserve Policeman Beaumont seized a wire and started to torch the cord. Before he could explode the bomb, he was knocked down by the shock of the battery and a terrific explosion was imminent. Beaumont and the detectives were taken to the hospital severely injured and one of them will lose the sight of one eye.

While sitting on the lawn of his beautiful country place at Hyde Park, N. Y., with his wife, his mother and his baby, Herbert H. Flack, son of A. A. He was revived and taken to Poughkeepsie in an automobile. The mansion and $75,000 worth of furnishings were destroyed. The burning of a tool house on Flack's $70,000 estate caused by an investigation, in which Clark's house became connected with those of Hoy Tracy, 19 years old, Sherlin Fraser, 21, and E. H. An Object Lesson.

The present gubernatorial primary contest furnishes an object lesson to the voters of Michigan that should not be lost. There was never, in the annals of legislation, a law passed, that was more antogonistic to true electoral reform than the primary law under which the nomination for governor was made this year of our Lord, 1908.

There is not a feature of the law that is not an incentive to fraud. Under the old caucus and convention system, a majority governed, and if fraud controlled the caucus, the people rebuked it at the polls. Under the present primary law, thousands of democrats enrolled as republicans and voted in republican primaries. And the meat of the nut is that there is no recourse.

You cannot get behind the returns.

The present primary election law is worse than a failure—it is an abortion, and an outrage against popular sovereignty.

It is a medium through which more mischief may be worked than was ever thought of under the old convention system. It is a channel through which may flow more of the corruption and refuse of politics than was ever gathered in a political garbage wagon since the foundation of the world.

It is the fruit of an abnormal sentimentality that can be traced to that class of men who never attended the caucuses, but always growled the next morning after the caucus.

It is a fraud and a delusion.

Answer This Question!

We extract the following from the new county democratic organ—we forget the name:

"Consider whether it is right for you to go to the polls unthinkingly, election after election, and place a cross at the head of your party ticket, thereby voting it straight when many times by using a little forethought you would discover that some of the men on your ticket were unfit morally, soghilly, or intellectually, for the office that your vote will help to elect them to."

Can you name a candidate on the republican ticket that is "unfit morally, socially or intellectually" for the office that you are called upon to vote for? Is there a candidate on the republican ticket for a county office who has proven himself unworthy of preferment?

Answer, or forever after hold your peace!

SCHOOL NOTES.

Miss Carley, of the C. H. S., is going to start a class in Physical Culture for any of the girls who wish to take it up. The work will begin with the second semester.

The students of the C. H. S. are pleased to learn that the Citizen's Lecture Association has made arrangements for the ensuing year. The lectures for last year were uninteresting, as well as instructive, and the coming course is highly recommended. The first number is the Hungarian Orchestra.

Plans are being made for a reading room in the high school building, and before long we expect to have the room fitted up furnished, and ready for use. The senior girls have kindly taken charge of the reading table and books. This establishment will occupy the former English room; the English Department is now down in the music room.

Starting Tuesday, (last week) the 29th, the hours of the school were changed. The present program is: plan at 8:30, and the noon hour begins at 11:55. The afternoon session starts at 1:12, and closes at 3:30.

FROM LAND OF GILA MONSTER.

Dorothy Iddings Writes Interestingly From the Far Southwest.

H. Lee Iddings and Mrs. Iddings have received the following very interesting letter from their daughter, who is visiting her aunt in Arizona:

Phoenix, Ariz. Oct. 10.

"Here it is, the last day of September, and three months have gone by since I last saw you. It seems a long, long time ago, that Sunday afternoon when W. and I bade farewell and sailed away in the Manitou. It will not be a great while now when I will be packing up my 'duds' and coming back to you. How many things I will have to tell you, and Oh, how glad I will be to see you all after this grand summer's experience. Roy and Gerty have done so much for us and taken such good care of us that I feel very grateful. I have given them both an urgent invitation to visit us next summer, and we must surely try and entertain them as they have W. and I.

We returned yesterday a m. from a two days visit in Phoenix, the capital of Arizona. The ride over the mountains was perfectly fine but the rest of the way over the dusty desert was quite tedious. We arrived there about five o'clock and for an hour or so we went auto riding, out through the capital grounds, pass the asylum and into the irrigated district where everything is so fresh and green. It reminded me very much of the southern and central part of Michigan except for the mountains on either side. Afterwards we had dinner, and in the evening went to the theatre. Of course it was nothing like Lou A. in the way of a play, and we missed the grand cafes, especially the bristol, but nevertheless it was thoroughly an enjoyable time.

Really, this time of the year is not at all good for visiting Phoenix, for it is a genuine winter resort. The dining room at the hotel had not yet been opened for the winter and we had to eat at the different restaurants with all sorts of queer Mexicans and Indians. The next morning we witnessed the grand parade of Hanson & Dailey's from the hotel porch, and in the afternoon we took an auto for the circus grounds. Hot and dusty, well I should say. Phoenix certainly comes up to its reputation as to being a "hot even." Just think of the temperature being 103 degrees in the shade. That is its reputation during the month of July.

We all enjoyed the circus, but it kept our eyes wide open trying to look at all five rings. Tell Hashie they had a lively elephant about two and a half feet high and also a camel. We saw the smallest horse in the world, 17 inches long and weighing 71 pounds.

We started home that morning at two o'clock, but the sleeper was ready for us at nine so we had a good rest and got into T. at eight o'clock. It seemed so good to breath come fresh mountain air again. That same afternoon early we had a horse back ride and what a time as we had, the horses not being exercised for three days made very frisky, and every stone and stick they saw they would jump and shy. Duke, (my horse) was a double somersault, and refused to go across the railroad track, and some boys had to lead him over. Then we got out in the hills, a silly lee followed us and frightened both of the horses so that they almost dew they were so lae'. I can "stick on" alright now but I don't imagine I look very dignified or stately.

Last week we were invited to a luncheon given by a young lady here, and one evening Mr. and Mrs. Doyle had a few in for dinner. Wednesday they took W. and I on the Jerome trip and it certainly was a typical western one. We went on the narrow gage railway. In four miles there are 114 curves and in the whole trip there are 196. The road winds around and around the mountains and all the time going up, up, up in a gradual grade and when the summit is reached you look down upon the most inspiring and glorious sight ever conceived. The green fertile valley with the verde winding in many curves, and from this high point south resembling a serpent, then beyond the Red Rocks glowing pink from the setting sun and miles and miles away the San Francisco mountains with their snow white peaks. We sat in the back of the car where the baggage was and dangled our feet out of the side door. You must not think we were on one of the luxurious Santa Fe cars for it was only a freight train with a small coach at the rear. Roy had his rifle and when we came across the level places we amused ourselves in firing at the prairie dogs and the long legged road runners.

As the train came around the last curve we saw smoky Jerome, and such a place as it was. Built right on the mountain side and every step you take you are afraid of falling off into the chasm below, and not a bit of vegetation, for the sulphur fumes from the smelter kill every leaf and shrub.

We had rooms at Senator Clarks office and had supper in his private dining room. However he and his family were in New York but they bring friends of Mr. A. we were given the use of his apartments. I never saw such great courtesy shown anyone and we were given the very best. The rooms were most exquisitely furnished, and a large bath with every accommodation made it so pleasant. In the evening we visited the smelter and found it more than interesting. I think the United Verde mines known throughout the U. S., and Senator Clark is considered one of the wealthiest men in this country. Mr. A. is the attorney for this mine and both M. and he are friends of them. Once in the smelter I had come to the conclusion that Jerome was precisely like Hades. The sulphur fumes were almost unbearable, and the sleep, smoke-begrimed and chasm loading for almost a mile to the valley below made it seem like Hades itself. We watched them pour out the hot molten refuse from little cars down the sides of the mountain and light up the whole place, and it seemed as if the mountain and valley were all on fire. I thought the smelter was very interesting but it was so dreadfully hot that we were almost roasted. I can not imagine anyone leading out their existence in such a place. The workmen were all foreigners, and I noticed the expression on some of their faces: so ignorant and animal like.

We went home in the morning just as the sun was coming up over the mountains, and it was a most splendid thing to look upon.

Roy is coming up early before dinner and he and I are going for a horse-back ride. W. and I went this a m. and had such a good time. I think you will not know me, for I am so burned and healthy looking—as strong as Hercules. Roy said I did not look like the same girl."

"GET MONEY'S WORTH"—JOHN D.

"Look About You and Be Cautious," Advises Rockefeller.

"Look about you," he said. "See that you get your money's worth. If you don't—

"John Sullivan of Cleveland was proud of his reputation for generosity. Everybody sought his patronage—tailors, grocery, tobacconists, and so forth—and this delighted John.

"But one day at his tailor's he overheard something that gave him food for thought. He had been trying on some golf trousers, and was still in the dressing room, but the tailor thought him gone.

"'What shall I charge Mr. Sullivan for these golf trousers? John heard the clerk ask. 'Eight dollars a pair, the same as our other patrons?'

"'Nothing,' said the tailor, in a tone at once thoughtful and enthusiastic. 'Is a good customer. He always pays his bills promptly. He never haggles. Charge him dis.'

CAPTURES RUNAWAY ENGINE.

How a Plucky Engineer Overtook His Locomotive on an English Railway.

The engine was observed by the driver of another and more powerful one, behind the fugitive speeding in the direction of Darlington, he uncoupled his own engine, crossed the intervening line and set in pursuit on the same line. It was a long chase, but the pursuer, driven at top speed, actually overhauled the runaway.

At best it came near enough for the driver to crawl to the front of his engine and drop a stout chain over the tender hook of the other. He returned to his footplate, shut off steam, and reversed down his brake.

This detailed the one in front and so retarded its pace that the driver was able now to creep from his own engine on to the runaway, put on the brake and bring it to a standstill almost in the crowded Darlington station.

Her One Hat.

"What did you do with that beautiful hat you had last spring?" he asked radiantly. "I saw you in the subway with it on. It was all gold with a beautiful big buckle in front and feathers. Lovely hat!"

"You've either got the most mixed up memory I ever saw," she replied "I haven't had that one hat for the last I don't know when, and it's on my head."

Personally Responsible.

"That large man thinks himself a pretty important personage in this town, doesn't he?" asked the visitor. "Important?" exclaimed the native. "Why, if you told him we're having fine weather here, he swells up as if he thought he made it."—Stray Stories.

"The purchasers, presumably, F. T. Barnum, hope to realize a much larger profit on exhibiting the turtle at various country fairs.

—Is there any "graft" involved in this campaign? Is any county official charged with neglect or official corruption? Is there a republican county officer who is not charged with wrong? Yet this precious aggregation demands a "change." Why? Take up now, and give us a bill of particulars.

—A telegram was received here Sunday from Hattie Creek, that Ed. Engleton had met with a serious accident, and was in the hospital. Later information was to the effect that in backing a freight train he fell under the wheels, his left leg being taken off just below the knee. Mr. Engleton left at once for Hattie Creek.

—There is one thing that is unspeakably ridiculous in this county campaign. That a "mass" convention of 18—democrats, 18—democrats should put a ticket in the field, and then have the nerve to ask the people to vote it, upon a ticket that is the work of representative delegations from every township in the county, is something that appeals to the sober judgment of the voter.

—Petoskey News: The man of impure mind is generally the first to accuse others of impurity, and it is generally a safe proposition to seek for the cause in the life of the one who is casting aspersions upon the character and morals of another, and a superficial glance will usually uncovered the reticence of the person dealing in filth. When you find one eternally looking for filth or rottenness, its dollars to dimes its a fellow cry of "stop thief," in order to throw chaff off from the one who is guilty. The man or woman who is best taking care of their own chas.—viz, morals and reputations have the least time to look after others, or to try to regulate the affairs of their city.

THE TWO PICTURES.

"Look On This Picture and Then On This!"

Hamlet's interview with his ceiling, mother, in which the portraits of the good dead king and the bad live ruler were placed before her, is at least, suggestive of the two political situation in Charlevoix county.

When all the features of the situation are carefully considered, there should be no hesitation on the part of any voter. The convention which nominated the republican county ticket was, without doubt the most representative gathering, and the most harmonious political conference ever held in the county.

Every township in the county was represented by regularly accredited delegates, and every delegate was a representative citizen. The audience room of the court house was filled with an intelligent and respectable body of men as Charlevoix or any other county can produce. There was not one illegitimate note; not one unpleasant incident. There was not a suggestion from a delegate that public interests demanded a "change." On the contrary, this representative body of men, coming from every section of the county, unanimously approved of the past two years of republican administration of county affairs and unanimously placed a ticket in the field. That ticket the republicans of Charlevoix county have no need to apologize for.

The other picture is this:

Eighteen democrats meet in "mass" convention and nominate a ticket, and the only plea that they come before the people with is "Give Us a Change."

Why?

Considering only the question of ability and experience, both over the two tickets and judge for yourself. Do you think it would be wise or even prudent to exchange a republican nominee for the corresponding nominee on the democratic ticket?

Is there any good business sense in such a proposition?

Would you do such a thing in the adjustment of your own private business affairs?

Constitutional Amendment.

The following statement sets forth the purport, nature and effect of the proposed amendment to the constitution to be submitted to the qualified electors on the third day of November, 1908:

Section 10 of Article 14 of the constitution, as it stands, relates to the assessment of the property of corporations. The object of the proposed amendment is to authorize the assessment of not only the property of corporations, but also the property of partnerships, associations and individuals engaged in the business of transporting passengers and freight, transporting property by express, operating any mine, station or depot, transmitting messages by telephone or telegraph, loaning cars, operating refrigerator cars, fast freight lines, or other car lines, or operating or running cars in any manner upon railroads, or engaged in any other similar business. The amendment, if adopted, places all corporations, associations, partnerships and individuals engaged in a public service business above mentioned upon the same basis as to the assessment of their property by the State Board of Assessors.

The Booth Co. Situation.

Editor Sentinel:

For the information of my friends of Charlevoix and vicinity I wish to make the following statement:

The rumors that have been circulated about A. Booth & Co. of late through the newspapers of Detroit, Saginaw and Petoskey are absolutely without foundation. The immediate disposition of the physical assets of the company has not been a subject of consideration. There has been no proposition made by Mr. W. Vernon Booth to furnish new capital, and consequently it has never been "rejected."

The situation as it stands today is the business is to go on as usual under the receivership and within ten days a general manager is likely to be appointed.

Yours very truly,
GUY NORDHUM.

WARNER NOMINEE.

The Final Count and Review Gives Governor Nomination.

A Lansing Special says: Fred Warner becomes the nominee of the republicans party for chief executive of Michigan by reason of the withdrawal late Friday afternoon of Auditor-General Braisley, the latter calling off his attorneys and abandoning further attempt to secure the nomination through recount proceedings.

Although Braidley thus retreats, he by no means climbs into Warner's band wagon, but instead has issued a belligerent statement in which the retiretates his former charges that there were gross irregularities and fraud in the primary election, robbing him of the nomination, and declares that he had proof to substantiate his statement, had not the supreme court prevented its being presented to the board.

Further ill-feeling is sure to be aroused, it is said, by reason of Braidley's understanding that if he withdrew the certificate of nomination would be issued by the board of canvassers to Warner, giving the latter the nomination by a plurality, after all pencil marked ballots were thrown out, of about 75, while Warner uses claim the certificate should give the governor a plurality of 1,415, only the ballots being thrown out by the board being deducted from his original plurality of 1,565.

No Logic in The Argument.

We clip the following from the new Charlevoix County Democrat, concerning Judge Harris:

"Personally, the writer of this is a friend of Mr. Harris and wishes him well in everything except his political aspirations but there is one reason that the Sentinel has not thought of why Mr. Harris should not be re-elected this fall. That reason is purely and simplest for his retirement from the office. Judge Harris is an opponent of the two term theory and as such was heartily against Warner for a third term. He has already served two terms as Judge of Probate and according to his own theory should not be elected to a third."

This is a weak argument for the reason that the two cases are not influential. The law prohibits a treasurer from holding more than two terms. The reasons are obvious. The matter of gubernatorial tenure stands, in a huge footing, and the law governing the presidential tenure. Political conditions and expediency are the only factors controlling a gubernatorial third term. Recognizing a political hazard, Judge Harris opposed Warner for a third term, and so did the writer.

The Judge of the Federal Supreme Court, and of the Federal circuit and district courts are appointed for life. Judge Hamadell was on the bench of this circuit for twenty-five years. Judge Corkett would have been on the bench yet, had he lived.

The office of Judge of Probate is semi-judicial. While the law does not confine the office to lawyers, legal knowledge is essential, and many times essential. We do not think that a man in Charlevoix county who can deny the assertion that J. M. Harris is head and shoulders above his opponent in legal ability.

Judge Harris is a lawyer of large ability and extensive experience. His standing as a probate judge has been recognized by his election last year as president of the probate judge association. There is probably no man in the state better equipped for the office.

Homestead, a little village on the Ann Arbor railroad, not far from Thompsonville, in Benzie county, was almost completely destroyed by forest fires Sunday, but one store and a couple of houses being left. The loss is estimated at $40,000. A relief fund has been started for the sufferers.

BAILEY AND THE INN.

The Popular Boniface Makes Long Contract to Continue Management of the Inn.

[From the National Hotel Reporter.]

Mr. Fred J. Bailey, manager of the Charlevoix Inn, Charlevoix, Mich., has contracted with the Pere Marquette railroad company, its owners, to continue the management for a period of several years. The season just closed has been notably successful in every way. Not only was the Inn conducted in the most exemplary and satisfactory manner, but the financial showing was better than ever before. The railroad company will make several improvements in the hotel property before the opening of the summer season of 1909. New tennis courts, three in number, and a croquet ground will be laid out. The most important move at Charlevoix, however, is the decision of the Charlevoix Golf Association to spend $10,000 in improving the links and building a golf club house. Work is now under way, and the Charlevoix links will be in splendid condition next summer. As a resort for golfers Charlevoix possesses distinct attractions and advantages, the most important of which is the fact that a golf course lies at the very door of the Charlevoix Inn. No long ride in omnibus or motor boat is necessary to reach the Charlevoix golf links, as is true of many courses in Northern Michigan. Manager Bailey announces that next year the Inn positively will close earlier than September 20. Mr. and Mrs. Bailey, who went to Charlevoix as strangers two years ago, express themselves as more than pleased with the summer climate of Northern Michigan. After leaving Charlevoix Mr. and Mrs. Bailey will proceed to Detroit, Chicago and Cincinnati, going thence to Denver, Portland, Seattle and California. Returning eastward in February they will spend a couple of months with relatives in Mobile, Ala., and will proceed to Boston in April for the purpose of gathering a complete collection of New England delicacies for the Charlevoix Inn during the summer of 1909.

MARINE NOTES.

The steamer Jens Knudsen, Capt. Pinno, returned home from her Indington trip run last week, and is laid up for the season.

The tug Taylor left Tuesday with the schooner Rose Bella in tow, bound for Bay Mills, near the Soo. The Rose Bella goes after a cargo of pine for the Charlevoix Lumber Co.

The steamer Beaver arrived here from Sturgeon Bay Friday morning, and has resumed service on the Island route. The Beaver was in dry dock several days, where she was thoroughly overhauled and strengthened where required. There is not a steamboat element on the lakes than the Beaver.

There was some delay last week in valving the steamers Stirling and Illinois to reverse this week. Despatches were found in the ladies of the Illinois, and she was laid up, the Stirling coming out again for the remainder of the season. Capt. Stubblebean, formerly of the Illinois, and chief officer Alexander, formerly of the Manitou, are in the Stirling.

The steam schooner Major Perry, which was stranded at Northport point recently, was released by the tug Tiled Michigan. The tug Taylor brought her here in a badly leaking condition. Pumps were put aboard, and the tug Taylor left with her Tuesday morning for Sturgeon Bay, but ran into a Northeaster and took her to Northport, where she now lies. The schooner Perry is one of the few remaining sailing vessels on the lakes. Thirty-five years ago she was sailed by Capt. Mike Kelley well known here.

A Political Vendetta

By

CHAPTER XX.—(Continued.)

He raised his unnerved wrist, and gritted his teeth against the shock he imagined, but at once relapsed into the amused and defiant and unremoved manner of an inexpressive simulacrum.

"Oh shoot," he laughed sort with his lips glossed face slightly moving a chair towards the interior.

"No?" flared out Hope, "—

"Be reasonable," squeaks returned Kane. "It will pay you, honest. You are surprised, grouping in the dark, so you have let me be you pilot, for a spell at least.

"Listen to me," started Hope fiercely, striding up to the man and seizing one another by an iron grip and the two wilmed with a creaking shoulder—"I don covered you without, Kane, but I'm could never or later have led me to your lair?

"Easy!" decided Kane loudly—"Don't you see it is rather a pertinent question? I mean, frankly speaking, Hope, 'no doubt of you your wife?'

"Which is what?" croaked the odd cronies.

"And just! You defy me——"

"No sir, it the first says I show her to

"That woman?" hotly cried Hope.

"Why affer—exactly?

"No!"

"Mrs. Percy Kane—

"A lie!"

"Lilla!"

The name Kane called in a clear, quick tone.

Gilden Hope started. Its mention aroused some hint, some vague memory of the past.

It was an unusual name; where had he heard it before? under what circumstances connected with a dark chapter in his life? Was it the name of plots and enmity?

Before his perplexed mind could focus and connect the loose ends of the dim chain of reminiscence, he was aware of the strange silence. A shadow crossed the draperies, they parted. The woman of the inside bow and fathomless eyes stood in their presence, statuesque and impressive as before.

Unexpressing startledness was in the glance she bestowed on Kane. He enjoyed a fantasticity that was uneasy decorum his nobility.

"This gentleman," he said slowly, with a light gesture upon his elsewhere pinces, my statement that you are my wife."

"He need not," coldly returned the woman.

"Proof, Elinor"

She resolved within her corsage, produced a folded paper, unfolded it, and in an automatic way held it before him.

Hope read it, the words "Mrs. Percy Kane" were the well-

"Be reasonable," squeaks returned Kane. "It will pay you, honest. You are surprised, grouping in the dark, so you have let me be you pilot, for a spell at least.

"Listen to me," started Hope fiercely, striding up to the man and seizing one another by an iron grip and the two wilmed with a creaking shoulder—"I don covered you without, Kane, but I'm could never or later have led me to your lair?

"Easy!" decided Kane loudly—"Don't you see it is rather a pertinent question? I mean, frankly speaking, Hope, 'no doubt of you your wife?'

"Which is what?" croaked the odd cronies.

"And just! You defy me——"

"No sir, it the first says I show her to

"That woman?" hotly cried Hope.

"Why affer—exactly?

"No!"

"Mrs. Percy Kane—

"A lie!"

"Lilla!"

The name Kane called in a clear, quick tone.

Gilden Hope started. Its mention aroused some hint, some vague memory of the past.

It was an unusual name; where had he heard it before? under what circumstances connected with a dark chapter in his life? Was it the name of plots and enmity?

Before his perplexed mind could focus and connect the loose ends of the dim chain of reminiscence, he was aware of the strange silence. A shadow crossed the draperies, they parted. The woman of the inside bow and fathomless eyes stood in their presence, statuesque and impressive as before.

Unexpressing startledness was in the glance she bestowed on Kane. He enjoyed a fantasticity that was uneasy decorum his nobility.

"This gentleman," he said slowly, with a light gesture upon his elsewhere pinces, my statement that you are my wife."

The argument, the nature of the affair Hope—he—unceremoniously dodged from the room, leaving Kane amazed at the malice of his sudden evasion.

He heard Kane call out sharply to the woman:

"Elinor—it is Hope, that man. Hope your friends. He knows all?"

And a minute later, as he sped by the window outside. Hope shot a glance past the curtains, and saw the woman in the attitude of a hurried rushing into the apartment occupied for her husband to learn more of his mumbling.

"If they have accomplices in reach, I shall be pursued," reasoned Hope.

So he did not pursue the open road, but striking through the dense brush entered the reverse direction in which Murryville lay, and amid the night of intense excitement and resolution dodged all obstacles that lay in his way.

A scrawny, sore-footed exultation possessed his soul as he dodged usefully disordered, clear-cut purposes were outlined in his thoughts, of tactical, logical

Hope was shaken. He paled. He discerned the presence towards which he was hastening—was been hounded by the sheer ominous force of this man's cunning and scheming.

He had pulled this man down, and now he could at his still aged him to the grave, he believed. His mouth long dry had been to run down this man. He had been to run down this man, and now at the final ending he was diverted from his original purpose for a woman's sake!

"Speak!" he said imperatively.

"Very well!" said Kane, somewhat more seriously. "I determined to abandon the field when you started in the half of the stories, though I was not entirely penniless, all the same. I was entirely penniless, all the same. While you were reading on your notes in faneled security I had business to my journey's end. My will assumed to be her law—I only knew life here "Obeys phl to whom thirsted and revenge alone actuated her. I placed her in the hands of a trusted friend, with different my arrangements to wed her and fly the world and love. I had not followed old Gideiel Marsden's threat. You might say at the very altar Elsa, the same fear, confessed me. She was not my Nemesis. She had conceived a serious position I was in—she was afraid. It was expressly betrayal. Anything, I believed, I was. Were than that, she had confided me concerning the old man, who had been in the habit of isolated place, had put her in charge of an accomplice, a man I knew to be by his tone of unswerving fidelity. Thus was I baffled. She brought me home, I dared not do anything I knew she had profit—that is, the disposition of the property left by the late H. I needed her counsels. Thus far she confided with me. I wanted to have you imprisoned, lest by means of securing the half of the several bank notes that you had secreted, I would lose all I presumed to go with her to some foreign country. If she was made the instrument of your ruin, I was not a continual engine, as you see."

"And Claire?" merely insisted Hope, with bottom eyes of anxiety—and hate. Kane admitted his shoulders.

"Well," he said, sarcastically guarding the ill-at-ease expression, conscious of being a baffled, beaten man, "she has the perfection and fearlessness of a prisoner—in fact, she has kept Claire, too, a prisoner."

"Where?"

Kane smiled provokingly at the incongruous supremacy of the word.

"Do you suppose I would tell you that?" he inquired sardonically.

"After all this venom you have done me!"

"Yes, I see!" he hoarsely, suddenly spoke Kane, dropping his tones to a whisper—"that is why I am for a crime you can never fully prove."

"I have proofs!"

"No! No! I'm not she, Claire, all in all, now!"

It was true, Gideon Hope lowered his head—in humiliation. Truly, he was paltry with his money, for he contrasted the daring proposition that was coming, in the face of Kane's boldness, and—he loved Claire Trenaine.

"Yes," he said, without lifting his head.

"I will make a bargain with you—fair exchange. Did one of this woman who has me in custody, that is, give me the chance to—She has not, and I have secreted the half of the stolen bank notes. Release me, as I say, and give me your scrutinies half of the money, a year or two—for hours—against pursuit, and I will tell you what Lila woman, and Claire are, and—I will give you secret news with the being she dares for release—the alternative of Claire Trenaine."

The tempting bait allured, but only for moment that it dazzled. The Hope

Hope's eyes shot to his feet. His head rose—and his eyes were over the money, alone from his mind.

"No," he said—more dubiously.

"Yes," relaxed Kane, thunderstruck

"I shall find Claire Trenaine!"

"I shall find Claire Trenaine!"

Gilden Hope started as if from a electric shock.

He had received not to police with this man, and he now determined to be free from that hampering chain and drag him to the nearest police for the exactly his vow to his dead brother's memory he must do this.

If the woman Elita interfered, so much the worse for her.

But, in order to advance upon his enemy and carry into execution this design, as he knew well, Gideon Hope was suddenly electrified.

The life currents of his being checked their flow and his heart stood still.

The Hope's—the Hope's—precious moments—was sacrificing duty, and succumbed to a temptation. Hope! Hope! Hope! was constantly spoken.

"The dynamite!" he gasped.

Yes, the dynamite! He had pledged his word to the imprisoned agent of the Unknown Hope to assist in Murryville. Hope! Hope! Hope! and here he was dallying!

It had been a solemn compact between Warren and himself, that if he Hope, was unable to be in Murryville, Elsa Hope, to assist, and remove, which, Hope, offer the death-dealing explosive ex it had planned to the full point of spontaneous combustion the next day.

He had been on his way to fulfill his pledge when, applying at the house for a horse and vehicle, he had so strangely discovered his escape.

He had lost valuable time—two whole hours in this house. Would he be too late?

Despite his interest in Kane, he hastened away solely concerning Claire! Hope for the sake of action like a mother dashes her thrust.

The unsuspected agent of destruction repaired, according to the dynamite agent, in a closet in a room at the Vandyke House at Murryville, now about ten miles distant, and when it exploded some—a hundred—they might be blessed out!

Hope gnashed his teeth, but he tried to control himself for the sake of the facts Kane might divulge.

"I am going to tell you a little History," proceeded Kane, because I have a concern in this—because I have a concern, a bargain, to make with you.

"Go on!" decided Hope, uncompromisingly.

"Hate—you. For her sake, for Claire's sake, you know."

Hope was shaken. He paled. He discerned the presence towards which he was hastening—was been hounded by the sheer ominous force of this man's cunning and scheming.

FREEDOM OF BULGARIA PROCLAIMED BY PRINCE

THE NATIONS ARE MEDIATORS.

Powers Will Try to Prevent War Over Balkan Trouble, and Diplomats Confer.

Bulgaria, a tributary principality under the suzerainty of the Sultan of Turkey, Monday proclaimed its full independence of Turkey. This action was taken at Tirnovo by Prince Ferdinand, who was elected Prince of Bulgaria in 1887. The Bulgarian cabinet was with the prince, letting not two at the front her not journeyed with him to Tirnovo. Tirnovo is the ancient capital of the kingdom of Bulgaria, and it was there in the old days that the kings were crowned.

Turkey is and inclined toward war with Bulgaria, and London advises say that she will likely call a conference of the powers to consider Bulgaria's proclamation of independence. Little fears from the other capitals are that the powers will intervene to prevent hostilities in the near future. France has decided to act as conciliator for the purpose of preventing war, and Lord Dufferin, who has made multilateral proposals to the governments of Turkey and Bulgaria, is expected to arrive at Sofia, where he will confer with the Bulgarian Premier, Stoiloff, and other officials. Lord Dufferin, it is said, will also visit Constantinople, Athens and Belgrade.

Sofia, Bulgaria, Sept. 22.—Prince Ferdinand, in a proclamation issued today, declares Bulgaria to be an independent kingdom. The proclamation was read in the presence of the Bulgarian Cabinet, the Bulgarian Ministers at foreign capitals, and a large gathering of people in the ancient capital, Tirnovo. The Prince, in his address, said that the Bulgarians had suffered for centuries from the yoke of foreign rule, but they had never lost their national spirit. The Prince said that the Bulgarians had never ceased to be a nation, and that they had never ceased to be a nation, and that they had never ceased to be a nation, and that they

BETTER TIMES AHEAD

Cause of the Recent Financial Crisis.

PERIOD OF SHARP CONTRASTS

Great Activity and Deep Depression. Difficulty in Obtaining Capital For Railroads and Industrial Enterprises. Cloud of Uncertainty Passing Away.

The cloud of uncertainty which has been hanging over the business element of the United States is, in the opinion of the British commercial agent in this country, passing away. In a recent report to Parliament on this subject Mr. Seymour Bell, the British commercial agent in the United States, says:

"The year 1907 was one of sharp contrasts in the United States. It was a year of great activity and deep depression. During the earlier months all industries were exceedingly busy and mills were working at their utmost capacity. Many unfilled orders had been carried over from the previous year, and buyers were experiencing great difficulty in getting delivery of their goods. The railway lines were congested, wages were at their highest, and the high price of commodities raised the price of living to an excessive point. It was recognized by all those in a position to form an independent opinion that this tremendous industrial activity could not last; that it was merely a question of time before a reaction would set in.

"Money was becoming scarce, and the railways and other corporations were encountering great difficulties in obtaining the capital necessary to carry on the improvements and extensions which were in process of being carried out. Speculation in mining and real estate had been rife, and personal extravagance was at its height. That all tended to place additional burdens on the money supplies, which were hardly adequate to carry on the industries of the country. The railways were among the earliest and greatest sufferers from the financial stringency. They found it almost impossible to dispose of securities at a reasonable price and were forced to issue short time notes at a comparatively high rate of interest to enable them to continue their developments. As wages were high, owing to the scarcity of labor, and high prices were being paid for materials, the net earnings of the railways were considerably reduced, although the gross earnings showed an increase. This brought about lower quotations for railway shares, and the industrials followed the downward path.

"The situation was peculiar. On the one hand there were the manufacturers with more orders than they could fill and busy entering their plants, motions selling large quantities of goods at satisfactory prices, labor in such demand that even with the addition of over 1,000,000 immigrants it was necessary to employ inefficient workers at good wages. On the other hand there was dear money owing to scarcity.

"When, owing to a failure in New York, that was known on the occasion of some of the large financial transactions in the city, public confidence, which had previously been undermined by certain investigations, gave way completely, resulting in an acute money panic.

"The panic was entirely financial. It has, it is true, brought about a widespread suspension of trade and industry throughout the country, but as it occurred at a time when there was no accumulation of surplus goods there was no throwing on the market of merchandise at ruinous prices, the usual accompaniment of industrial panics. The manufacturers, on the contrary, faced the inevitable and without delay proceeded to curtail the supply and thus reduce such chances as there might have been of glutting the market with unsalable articles. Fortunately for the country, warning of the coming crisis came early, and it was possible to take steps in time to prepare for it.

"As to the length of time the present depression will last, it is difficult to form an opinion. It must not be forgotten that the farmers, who form the backbone of America's prosperity, have not been affected by the financial situation. Them a the crops in 1907 fell short in quantity as compared with 1906, higher prices were obtained, and the farmers received considerably more money for their crops than in the previous year. A country that produces crops valued at nearly $1,500,000,000 is unlikely to suffer long from industrial stagnation. It represents too large an amount to be held long under foot. Farmers have had nine years of almost uninterrupted prosperity. Their buying power is high, and the town dependent up on them will remain prosperous.

"The farmers, who a few years ago owed money, now own money and have an assured off it for their products, as there is no a crumpity.

"The cloud of unrest many which has been hanging over the country for so long and gradually growing more threatening is now just rising away, and it may be said that the worst of the storm has now passed. There will in all probability be some little disturbance for some months to come, but readjustment and readjustment will be well under way, and quiet labor troubles should retard the improvement of manufacturing capital interest to keep up prices at too high a level it is convinced that before many months have passed business will be on a more and more normal basis."

Criticism of Nature.

"It has always seemed to me that Nature is at fault," observes the philosopher of Puffs, "when she gives a man a mouth capable of biting off more than he can chew."

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

Machinery of Congress Already Started for Postal Savings Bank Law.

A Safe and Sane Plan for the Convenience of the People and the Encouragement of Thrift.

"We favor the establishment of a postal savings bank system for the convenience of the people and the encouragement of thrift."

This is the declaration of the Republican national platform, and postal savings banks will without doubt be authorized by law and established as a part of our financial system by the action of Congress at its coming session, which will be convened in December. Indeed, much has already been accomplished towards the enactment of this law. At the last session of Congress a bill was carefully prepared which met with the approval of the Postmaster General, and was reported upon favorably by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. This bill is now on the Senate calendar and can be acted upon as soon as Congress is convened.

The scope of the proposed law is set forth in the committee report, which is in part as follows:

Committee Report.

The purpose of this bill is to place at the disposal of people of small means the machinery of the Postoffice Department to aid and encourage them to save their earnings. The subject of postal savings banks or depositories is not new in this country and it may be truly said to be quite familiar to the people of Europe and the British colonies. The propriety of establishing postal savings banks became the subject of discussion in England as early as 1867. Every objection to such use of the postoffice facilities which in this country was vigorously pressed in the long-continued discussion of the subject in England.

For over fifty years private savings institutions waged strict opposition to the growing sentiment in favor of postal savings banks, but notwithstanding such opposition in 1861 an act of Parliament was passed entitled "An act to grant additional facilities for depositing small savings with the security of the government for the due repayment thereof." That the alarm of private institutions was ill founded is amply proved by the recorded fact that the private savings banks increased their capital by more than ten millions of dollars in the first fifteen years following the establishment of postal savings institutions.

That the postal savings institutions proved successful is satisfactorily attested by the fact that no backward step has ever been taken in England on this subject and by the further fact that in rival succession the land of England was taken by other countries.

The primary purpose of these institutions is to encourage thrift and a saving disposition among the people of small means by placing at their disposal in every part of the country ready facilities for the depositing of their money with absolute assurance of repayment on demand with a low rate of interest on a limited aggregate amount.

Postal Savings Banks Needed.

In certain parts of our country savings institutions are sufficiently numerous to accommodate the people, but such areas are quite limited, being confined to New England and New York. It is alleged that by reason of the number and location of savings banks there is one savings account to every 2[illegible] of the population of New England, whereas in all the country outside New England and New York the average is only one savings account to every 15[illegible] of the population. Taking such figures to be approximately correct and recognizing the fact that the people of all sections of this country are pretty much the same in habits, inclinations, and purposes, it must be obvious to the most casual observer that the people of the South the Middle West, and the West do not save their earnings as do those of New England from the mere want of secure places in which deposits may be made.

To those who feel inclined to believe that the establishment of postal savings depositories will involve an element of paternalism it seems quite sufficient to suggest that the machinery of the Postoffice Department is now in existence and will continue to exist with or without the enactment of a law whether such depositories are created or not and that the establishment of these depositories for the benefit of the people will not involve one farthing of loss to the Postoffice Department, but will probably, on the contrary, prove more than self-sustaining. Very slight computation will easily demonstrate that the postal savings depositors can not harass the Postoffice Department with any additional deficiency.

If I am elected President, I shall urge upon Congress, with every hope of success, that a law be passed requiring a filing in a Federal office of a statement of the conditions imposed by committees and candidates in elections for members of Congress and in such other elections as are constitutionally within the control of Congress.—From Hon. Wm. H. Taft's speech accepting Presidential nomination.

THE DUMPING PRACTICE.

Protested Manufacturers Are Not the Only Ones Who Follow It.

Selling goods to foreign buyers for less than the domestic buyer is required to pay is so common throughout the world that it seems as if it were the result of a general law of trade. We are informed on good authority that American steel and food products are sold abroad for less than the prices charged in the United States. In our March issue we presented evidence of the sale of German worsted dress goods for export at less than cost. Canada has found the dumping of foreign products so demoralizing to her industries that she has imposed penalties designed to prevent the practice.

The following letter to the Manchester Guardian gives the experience of an English manufacturer of drying and ventilating apparatus who found that the English firms from which he bought goods were ready to sell for export at a discount of 30½ per cent greater than he could obtain in England:

Manchester, March 9.

Sir—In connection with some contracts abroad we wanted certain goods which are only made by a limited number of English firms. These firms gave us prices but said quite as a matter of course that 15½ per cent should be delivered at the place for which we wanted them. Not being satisfied, we asked our representative abroad to write to the same English firms for prices, and they quoted him 3 per cent off the same list for the same goods and the same delivery.

If this is not preference for the foreign, we should like to know what it is. Yours, etc., J. D. RUTCLIFFE,

Managing Director Buckeye Ventilating and Drying Company, Limited.

When attacks are made on a protective tariff because manufacturers sell for export at prices below those charged at home, it is well to bear in mind the above and similar cases that show the prevalence of this practice in other countries. Dumping may be, as we think it is, wrong and an injury to both the dumper and the dumped, but it is not an argument against a protective tariff. It is an evil that calls for some other remedy than one that would destroy our home industry. That remedy, as we have seen, is sought by both free trade England and tariff country of high protection.—Textile World Record.

NO MYSTERY ABOUT IT.

Republican Position on the Question of Tariff Revision.

The Republican party is now committed to revision. It would be well for the country to be informed before the full election what the party knows mean by revision.—New York World.

The platform of Republican tariff revision may be concisely stated as follows:

First.—Maintenance of the protective system, declared by the late President McKinley in his last speech to be "firmly established."

Second.—The adjustment of all import duties to present labor and market conditions.

Third.—If any duties are set high enough for adequate protection, they are to be made lower.

Fourth.—If any duties are too high for fair protection, they are to be made lower.

Fifth.—The work is to be done intelligently, thoroughly and as soon as possible after information necessary to a proper performance of the task shall have been gathered.

There is no doubt that the number of Americans who favor this course is vastly larger than the number who desire to see tariff revision undertaken by the Democratic party, which declares that "protection is robbery" and has frequently asserted that the amount of revenue to be yielded is the only question which property has anything to do with the adjustment of import duties.—Rochester Chronicle.

False Pretense.

Those who have been using tariff revision as a false pretense to cover their real desire for free trade do not want the tariff made fair and up to date. They want it destroyed, and the better the tariff of 1897 is made, the wiser and sounder the revision, the more permanent and beneficial its schedules are to American capital and American labor, the sooner they will be. It seems a mockery for those who want to destroy the protective tariff to talk in a solemn, sanctimonious way about the best time for revision when they know perfectly well that all the while they were pretending to help prune and spray the tree they are aching for a chance to tear it out by the roots.—Indianapolis Star.

FRANCIS CURTIS' WORK.

Leslie's Weekly has this to say of Francis Curtis, formerly of Springfield, now director of the Republican literary bureau at Washington:

For nearly a quarter of a century Republican leaders have considered the matter of a permanent bureau which should carry on a literary propaganda before and after as well as during campaigns and elections. All attempts, however, to establish and maintain such a bureau were in vain until the last session of the last congressional campaign an arrangement was made by Chairman Sherman and Secretary Loudenslager with Francis Curtis to inaugurate and maintain a permanent Republican literary bureau. This bureau, located at Washington, is a complete success and has more than fulfilled the expectations of the congressional committee.

Perhaps there is no man in the country better equipped by experience and knowledge to be in charge of such a bureau than Mr. Curtis. He has worked with national and congressional committees for twenty years, is the author of the only complete history of the Republican party ever written, has exhaustively written on the tariff question and has a rare collection of books and pamphlets on every phase of Republican legislation. While a large part of Mr. Curtis' work is not of a public nature, still it is the most logically made and effective of all methods of campaigning, and the early and committee are to be congratulated upon the success of the bureau and its director.

ALL RECORDS SMASHED.

High Water Mark Reached in Exports of Our Merchandise.

The tide of this country's sales of merchandise to foreign lands has this year swept away all former high water marks. In eight months, up to May 1, the excess of exports over imports has reached the stupendous total of $[illegible]000,000.

These figures beat by $122,000,000 the record for any similar period in the past. In February the United States exported goods valued at $[illegible]000,000, and the imports were only $75,000,000.

English free traders in trying to explain away America's rapidly rising export business contend that financial distress obliged us to sell products in Europe that the people at home could not consume. This is a feeble argument. The truth is that the old world needs a steadily growing amount of American cotton, wheat, corn and copper, besides other commodities in which this republic is the grand storekeeper.

Europe buys these things not because it wishes to, but because it must. They are necessities. On the contrary, a very large part of American imports consist of luxuries, such as wines and precious stones, which may very readily be done without when the money is needed for other things.—Philadelphia Press.

Potatoes a Staple Dish.

Potatoes furnish about one-eighth of the total food of the average American. In other words, he lives on potatoes for nearly one day out of every week. Compared with the 12½ per cent of his diet that is potato, all the other vegetables show up only as a trifle over seven per cent.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE

A Movement to Increase Number of Delegates.

The Michigan State Grange Is Procuring the Sentiment of Every Subordinate Grange in the United States on Representation in the National Body.

The Michigan state grange at its annual meeting voted to memorialize the Order throughout the United States to behind of such revision of the constitution as will provide for and establish a more just and equitable representation in the national grange than now exists. The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved by the Michigan state grange in annual session assembled, That we hereby memorialize the National grange by instructing the member of delegates to the National grange to petition its membership in the various states to so amend the constitution and laws as will provide for an increase of delegates and alternates and bills with the first Monday in December next, and that the secretary of this state be instructed to send a copy of this resolution to the secretary of the National grange.

Resolved, That we hereby instruct the Executive committee of the Michigan state grange to prepare and send to the National Grange grange in the United States a circular, setting forth the facts and resolutions and instructions to the end that this subject may be discussed in each subordinate grange.

The officers of the Order doubtless had in mind the federal system of national government when drafting the resolutions. They provided for representation in each state as in the United States by two representatives at large, the rest according to population. Thus the two representatives at large would represent the Michigan state grange, while the rest would represent the subordinate granges in the state. The representation of the membership as provided by the house of representatives in the national congress. The plan is based by the Michigan state grange officers and has been approved by the master and lady assistant of the National grange. Thus the two representatives at large would represent the NIGHT RIDERS KILL A FAMILY.

Three Shot to Death, One Missing and Four Morally Wounded.

One man and two children shot to death, another can missing and believed cremated, his wife and three other children morally wounded and their home in ashes are results of a raid by night riders on the home of David Walker, a negro, near Hickman, Ky. The fifty raiders had planned to administer a whipping to Walker because he had served a white woman as tenant and drawn a pistol on a white man. The night riders arrived at Walker's house shortly after midnight and ordered him to come out. Walker refused and opened fire on the band. In rapidly ensuing volleys the house was riddled with bullets and shot through the windows as they attempted to escape. Walker, his 7-year-old daughter and a boy fully ran to the mulberry tree where killed outright. The mother was shot through the stomach as she came to the door and is dying. Three other Walker children were also mortally wounded by the fusillade. Walker escaped unscathed and is believed to have been consumed in the burning buildings. MOTHER SEES BEAR KILL BABY.

Crowd Is Charged by Animal Enraged at Being Refused Pop.

An immense black bear, which broke out of its cage at Elysian Grove, a pleasure park near Tremont, Ariz., charged the crowd and killed a baby. The bear had been taught to drink soda pop and when he got it wrong he would growl, and was driven away. The animal became enraged and charged a crowd which had gathered. Rose Lahel, a Southern Pacific employee, started to run away with his year old baby in a gauzet, but the bear snatched the infant out and killed it before its parents. The animal then attacked the mother, too, and killed by a shot from a policeman's revolver.

KILLING PRAIRIE DOGS.

Uncle Sam Said They Are Poisoned 1,000,000 of Them.

Merchants, Finds Sam has been on the warpath during the summer, and many wholesale merchants have seen the result than at any time in the history of the country since the ruthless extinction of the buffalo. This savage warfare has not been waged with poison and shot, but with subtle poison, and the victims have not been men or rattlesnakes, but the gentle and quiet prairie dog, ludicrous jabber-dogs. For years the private war has been the goal of Western farmers, who have tried, but ineffectively, to get rid of them. The Department of Agriculture, too, has tried the farmer in every possible way, took a hand in the matter this summer, and, after trying several other ways of annihilation, decided that poison was the most practicable method of ridding the soil of the pests, with the result that nearly a million trifles fell at the hands of the official executioners.

The prairie dog is a great hindrance to agriculture. If he chooses a spot that appears suitable for a pleasant home, he enthuses his kith and kin, and in a comparatively short time his tribe has multiplied the comfortable dwellings until acres are not numerous enough for the family. They make the soil almost useless. Their holes are connected by miniature tunnels so that, while the ground may appear solid, it is in reality mostly honeycombed in some areas and least. The death of many riders on the plains is a silent testimonial to the injury done by the prairie dog.

The stockmen of the West urged the Department of Agriculture for years to some measures to check the increasing annoyances from the dogs, and the territory was visited by following experiments in outlying forests in one of the chief dogs of Grande Prairie Dog Town, Nebraska, and the forest service was charged with the work of extermination. The first experiment was made in parts of Lonesome and Pike national forests, which are largely dog-infested, lated a territory of 200 square miles. A dog town of 75 acres was selected and poison was prepared by cooking wheat with strychnine solution made alluring by molasses and anise seed, a combination which no prairie dog can resist. This poison-wheat was placed at the mouth of each hole, and the season became an expert at their work in the dog-town alone on horseback and drop the death dealer with great rapidity. The dogs ravenously ate the poisoned grain and in less time no less than 90 per cent of them died. The survivors fled to other towns, but the pest, or those who were not hungry at that time, were sifted on the second trip of the foresters, and in a short time every dog was dead. Next spring the forest service promises to go after the billing business on a larger scale.
